HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Wednesday, September 26, 1984

The House met at 10 a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Deliver us, O God, from all that would hinder from the realization of the beauty of Your world and the glory of Your promises to us. Take away the darkness of futility, and lead us in a greater awareness of the reality of the blessings available to us. May we see more clearly, the richness of Your grace and forgiveness, of Your majesty and love. As we seek our way through life, may Your providence give us confidence, Your spirit give us hope, and Your Word give us understanding. In Your holy name, we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 718. An act for the relief of Samuel C. Willett; and

H.J. Res. 649. Joint resolution changing the date for the counting of the electoral votes in 1985.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 3398. An act to change the tariff treatment with respect to certain articles, and for other purposes;

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H.R. 6028) "An act making appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health, and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. WEICKER, Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. RUDMAN, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. MCCLURE, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. STENNIS, Mr. PROXMIRE, Mr. BYRD, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. EAGLETON, Mr. CHILES, Mr. BURDICK, and Mr. INOUYE, to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2166) "An act to authorize appropriations to carry out the Indian Health Care Improvement Act, and for other purposes," agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. GOLDWATER, Mr. GORTON, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. MELCHER, Mr. INOUYE, and Mr. DECONCINI to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that Mr. FORD be a conferee, on the part of the Senate, on the bill (S. 1097) "An act to consolidate and authorize certain atmospheric and satellite programs and functions of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration under the Department of Commerce," in lieu of Mr. LAUTENBERG, excused.

BRADLEY-GEPHART ANTIFAMILY TAXATION

(Mr. DANNEMEYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, there have been two trends in this country in the past 40 years which affect all of us: Families have grown smaller and taxes have grown larger—a lot larger.

In 1944, the birth rate per 1,000 population was 21.2. Following the postwar "baby boom," it was still 24.5 in 1949. Then it began an inexorable decline until bottoming out in the mid-1970's. In 1975 and 1976, for example, the birth rate was only 14.8 per 1,000. Although there has been a recent upturn, the rate in 1982 was still a meager 16.0 per 1,000.

Conversely, taxes, as we all know, have increased dramatically. What we may have overlooked, however, is the negative effect tax policy has had on families. In 1945, the Federal income tax exemption for each dependent was $500. The Consumer Price Index for that year was 53.9 (1967=100). The CPI in 1983 was 298.4—a 453.6-percent increase. But the exemption for dependents had risen to only $1,000. To keep up with inflation, that exemption needed to be $2,768. Not only is it more expensive to feed, clothe, and educate our children, we also get penalized for having them by our tax laws.

It is unfortunate that the Bradley-Gephardt flat tax proposal limits the exemption for dependents to $1,000. It is hoped that the authors will raise this antifamily level of exemption to an appropriate amount.

Among other merits of the Kemp-Kasten and Siljander flat tax proposals, one of the most important is the doubling of the exemption for dependents to $2,000. This falls short of the nearly $3,000 which will be necessary to equal the 1945 exemption in 1984, but it goes a long way to correcting a sad and unjust situation.

NOISE ABATEMENT

(Mr. ANDERSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I was shocked to learn that efforts are underway in the Senate to circumvent our aviation noise reduction standards so that a few foreign air carriers can continue to operate noisy jet aircraft into our airports.

In a nutshell, in 1976, the Federal Aviation Administration [FAA] required all airlines using U.S. airports to retrofit their four-engine aircraft, by January 1, 1985, or replace them with quieter aircraft. The affected aircraft include Boeing 707's and McDonnell Douglas DC-8's.

In 1979, the Congress adopted the Aviation Safety and Noise Abatement Act which, among other things, reaffirmed this rule and the January 1, 1985 deadline.

Now, just 3 months before this January 1 compliance date, a number of South American and Caribbean airlines are looking to exempt themselves from this requirement at Miami International Airport.

As the former chairman of the Subcommittee on Aviation, and author of the 1979 Noise Abatement Act, I believe it would be totally inappropriate for the Congress to grant this exemption to these foreign carriers.

All air carriers—whether they be domestic or foreign—have been given 8 years to comply with this rule. Virtually all U.S. carriers will be able to meet the January 1 deadline. It has cost them a tremendous sum of money but they have acted responsibly and the net result will be less noise in and around impacted residential and business communities, many of which were built prior to the jet age.

It would now be a severe blow to our domestic aviation industry and many foreign carriers who have already complied with this noise standard if we were to now allow, at the last second, an exemption to a few who have, for some reason, developed the attitude that they should be exempt from this badly needed noise abatement rule.

I strongly urge the House conferees on the continuing resolution for 1985 to reject any attempt by the Senate to tamper and dilute the rules to keep noisy jets out of our airports.

ARKANSAS IS A NATURAL

(Mr. BETHUNE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BETHUNE. I thank the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, and my colleagues, in my State we are proud to say "Arkansas is a natural." We are proud to say that because of our beautiful mountains, our streams, forests, plains, and delta lands in our State have attracted people from all over the country. As the Nation is moving to the South and to the West, Arkansas is in that path of growth and people are coming our way because of the quality of life and the entrepreneurial opportunity we have. And that is why all Arkansas is pleased that we are going to have a wilderness bill which will set aside 91,000-plus acres of land in our national forests so that trees won't be cut, roads won't be built, and mines won't be dug, and it will be protected for all time's sake.

Nine out of the ten major areas that those of us are trying to conserve, our lands and the beauty of our State, will be set aside. We will not now have to say to our children why we call Arkansas a natural; they can go out and look for themselves and see the beautiful land all around them. We are very excited in Arkansas that our wilderness bill will become law.

TROUBLING QUESTIONS

(Mr. SKELTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, once again, the tragic news from Beirut informs us of the deaths of two American servicemen, Army CWO Kenneth Welch and Navy POfc. Michael Wagner, who worked at the temporary site of the U.S. Embassy. A suicide truck bomber drove to within 20 feet of the Embassy annex before the detonation of the vehicle's explosives.

There is some comfort in knowing that certain security measures taken to protect the building saved the lives of many others who might otherwise have died. Concrete barriers erected to channel the flow of traffic to the Embassy and local security guards who fired and hit the truck carrying its deadly cargo prevented the driver in the vehicle from reaching the building itself. The toll could have been much higher.

Yet, once again, there are troubling questions that remain unanswered. The first concerns the delay encountered in putting in place a security barrier, a gate with a steel bar, that was designed to drop into place in front of a vehicle trying to make an unauthorized entry into the Embassy compound. What was the cause of the delay? The second concerns the identity of those responsible and on a broader level the state of our intelligence capabilities in that strife-torn country. Who or what comprises Islamic Jihad? What progress are we making in putting together a first-rate intelligence gathering network in the area? And, finally, the last concerns the response of our Government. What are the measures we plan to take now? What added measures can we take to protect our diplomats in Beirut? Can we realistically strike back at those who have hit us yet once again? The answers to these questions must be found if we are to operate in an effective manner in the Middle East or in other troubled areas of the world.

When the Reagan administration took office it expressed great concern about international terrorism. Secretary Haig said that terrorism would replace human rights as the administration's primary concern. However, it was not until after the attack on U.S. targets in Lebanon last year that the administration took concrete steps toward putting together a policy to deal with this serious problem.

I hope that those in the administration will take my next comments as a form of constructive criticism. While there has been much talk about "appropriate preventive and preemptive actions" it does this country little good for its spokesman to talk a tough game and then do nothing. They would do themselves and the Nation much better by remembering the words of another Republican President, Theodore Roosevelt, who said "Speak softly and carry a big stick."

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE SHOULD BE TAKEN TO TASK

(Mr. BURTON of Indiana asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr Speaker, earlier this year the Department of Commerce approved export license permits that allowed the sale of bullet-proof vests to Syria. Syria was in a warlike posture toward the United States at the time.

We were able to get that stopped, Mr. Speaker, but now we find that the Department of Commerce has approved an export license permit that allows the sale of war materiel to Iran. Iran, an avowed enemy of the United States. Iran, who has been linked to the bombing of our Embassies in Kuwait and Beirut. Iran, also linked to the bombing of our Marine base in Beirut.

Mr. Speaker, this is crazy. We can no longer tolerate aiding and abetting an enemy of the United States.

If it means the Congress itself must approve future export licenses to stop this lunacy, then so be it.

The Department of Commerce must be taken to task and this practice must be stopped and stopped now.

THE PLIGHT OF THE HOMELESS

(Mr. ACKERMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, excuse me for 1 minute, but I want to talk to the President.

Ron, I for one appreciate your candor about the homeless, those people who had the audacity to sneakily plunge through your safety net just so that they could live in a rent-free gutter.

How dare they choose to live in the streets instead of buying a condominium, or moving into one of those thousands of apartments that I know some day you meant to provide.

Some of them are so insensitive to our national interests that they plan to display the bad form of freezing or starving to death in an election year.

You are right, Ron. The problem with the homeless is that they are too darn conspicuous.

How can you be expected to deliver those nice little homilies about equality and economic recovery with those vagrants flopping down in front of the Departments of Justice and Commerce?

Your operators from GSA were right, too, Ron, when they tried to put covers over the street grates so that these freeloaders could not sleep on them.

It is hard to get to the prosperity around the corner with all of these distractions on the sidewalks.

PROTECTIONISM, ISOLATION, AND CENTRALISM: HALLMARKS OF THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY

(Mr. PORTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, it is extremely interesting that protectionism, isolationism, and centralism, in other ages among the unfortunate tenets of the Republican Party, have now become the hallmarks of your party.

The Smoot-Hawley tariffs, the symbol of post-World War I economic folly, have become today's Mondale quotas. The Republican Party learned its lesson from history but your party apparently never has.

Isolationism, a strong Republican theme prior to World War II, when America almost failed to rescue Western civilization from Nazi barbarism, is now the battlecry of Democrats from GARY HART to GERALDINE FERRARO. See no evil, they say, even in our own hemisphere, even a few hundred miles south of our own borders. Accommodate. Pull back.

And centralism, the theme John C. Fremont carried forth from the first Republican Convention in 1856, is now standard Democratic dogma, even while the Republican Party and the American people have long since seen the wisdom of greater roles for State and local governments.

Protectionism. Isolationism. Centralism. Thomas Jefferson would never recognize you, Mr. Speaker. No wonder your party has lost its ruling coalition.

NO BANK BILL THIS YEAR

(Mr. ROEMER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Speaker, the House leadership has decided that we will have no bank bill this year. I am disappointed, but I understand the press of politics, of time, of differences with the Senate and all the rest.

This decision means that the House will not close the nonbank bank loophole. The House will not repair damage to the Glass-Steagall Act. The House will not demand reformation of the bank regulators, will not review interstate or regional banking, will not address the impending disaster in international lending, will not attempt to eliminate the double standards hitting big banks versus small ones, will not modernize Federal Deposit Insurance, will not—well, you get the idea. Wait until next year.

But I warn you, the issue of bank regulation will not disappear with time. It will grow larger. It is the economic issue of our time affecting interest rates, availability of credit, monopoly power, small business, agriculture, homebuilding, export trade, and jobs.

Get ready. Do your homework. Talk to your constituents. This will be a tough fight and the longer we wait, the tougher the fight.

FEARFUL RHETORIC ENTERS CAMPAIGN

(Mr. McEWEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, some very fearful rhetoric has entered the Ferraro-Mondale campaign. It causes me to recall the history of armed conflict in this Nation. The resignation of Secretary of State William Jennings Bryan prior to World War I, in protestation of the missed opportunities for peace before the outbreak of hostilities. I think of the ostrich approach to national defense in the 1930's that ultimately led to the 55 million dead in World War II. I remember Secretary of State Acheson drawing the line, limiting the sphere of influence of the free world that deliberately excluded the Korean peninsula thus inviting aggression into Korea. I think of the Bay of Pigs, the missile crisis in Cuba, Vietnam, the Iranian crisis, which ultimately led to the resignation of Secretary of State Cyrus Vance.

Then I read that every day for the last 10 days the Ferraro-Mondale ticket has said such things as: "Mr. Reagan blamed the Syrians for the attacks on our marines. He promised retribution. But nothing happened. So much for standing tall."

Mr. Speaker, as I review the history of armed conflict in this country, I believe that this is not the time for such inflamatory efforts to taunt the President to pursue combat. Our world is much too volatile to define standing tall as the "capacity to level retribution on unnamed terrorists."

For the sake of peace, we should not place such reckless rhetoric in the White House.

LET'S CALL IT THE "SERGEANT BILKO"

(Mr. SMITH of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, in recent weeks further problems have come to light with regard to the division air defense gun named after that great American hero, Sgt. Alvin York.

To compensate for the gun's short range, the Pentagon plans to combine it with Stinger heat-seeking missiles.

The Army paid millions of dollars more than was necessary for the gun in part because the Army's negotiators failed to follow Government standards.

The Army failed to reveal key test results until after the Pentagon decided to proceed with the program.

Putting such a system into the field will endanger the lives of American soldiers. That would be a national disgrace.

We are sullying the name and reputation of a great American by calling this system the Sergeant York.

This weapon needs a name that fits its track record.

The Army should rename it the "Sergeant Bilko"—and then decommission it. All $4.2 billion of it.

THE THIRD BOMBING OF AN AMERICAN FACILITY IN LEBANON

(Mr. KILDEE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, early Friday morning, for the third time in the last several months, we awakened to the news of another tragic loss of life by yet another truck-bombing in Lebanon.

Many Americans are disturbed by the cavalier and insensitive attitude our national security leaders have displayed over this latest tragedy.

Secretary of State George Shultz reacted by lamely declaring that Embassies must be open to transact day-to-day business.

And Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger indicated that efforts to defend against such attacks were futile. He went on to offer a new suggestion that potential terrorists could "get a couple of people who could learn to fly a helicopter because all your barriers and tank traps are not going to prevent that."

But none of these comments are more telling than the response of our Commander-in-Chief, President Reagan. He compared this third breakdown in security arrangements to not being able to remodel one's kitchen as soon as one wishes.

Mr. Speaker, Lebanon is not a kitchen in need of remodeling. It is a country in the midst of a very bitter and violent civil war. The Americans who represent us there deserve much better protection than that which has so far been provided. We can only hope that these initial remarks from our national security leaders are not indicative of their determination to prevent a fourth such tragedy from occurring.

ALBERT HALPRIN TO HEAD FCC'S COMMON CARRIER DIVISION

(Mr. BRYANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, the Washington Post this morning revealed that the Federal Communications Commission, appointed by President Reagan and headed by Mr. Mark Fowler, has decided to hire a gentleman to head the FCC's Common Carrier Bureau named Albert Halprin, who in the last 18 months has received $270,000 in fees from persons and companies regulated by that very division, including $75,000 in fees from AT&T, the world's largest monopoly, and, of course, the one company that is most subject to regulation by that particular division of the FCC.

Nothing in my opinion better demonstrates the absolute inability of this administration to discern the difference between the private interest and the public interest than this appointment.

I would like to say, while mentioning this topic, that the President of the United States has repeatedly condemned this House and the Speaker of this House for not taking up some parts of his agenda. I suggest to the President that, while he is talking about the agenda of the American people, that he ask the Republican controlled other body of this Congress why it has buried over there telephone legislation designed to guarantee the public reasonable telephone rates and guarantee competition in long distance that is going to benefit the consumer as well as the free enterprise atmosphere of this United States of America.

NEXT THING TO A MIRACLE: ORAL REHYDRATION THERAPY

(Mr. VENTO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I want to call my colleagues attention to what I believe is a modern health miracle—oral rehydration therapy [ORT]. Recently I met with several constituents from an organization called results, which works to focus public attention upon the problems of hunger and malnutrition. I also viewed a brief film which was recently broadcast on an episode of ABC television's program "20/20" which dealt with an amazingly successful treatment for victims of dehydration which is currently being used in Bangladesh. This treatment, known as oral rehydration therapy has been described by at least one well-known medical authority as potentially "the most important medical discovery of this century." ORT involves a simple mixture of unrefined sugar and salt, with water, and then administering this solution to the dehydration victim. This solution has been found to increase the body's ability to retain both salt and water and other essential body fluids by more than 2,500 percent.

This simple and profound discovery may save the lives of literally millions of children and adults in the world's developing nations who die from dehydration. Diarrheal diseases, such as cholera, kill 1 out of every 10 children today in the developing countries. ORT has proven to be a lifesaver in many remote rural areas where access to professional medical facilities and care is often quite limited.

Our colleague, the chairman of the Select Committee on Hunger, Congressman MICKEY LELAND, and I have arranged for this film to be shown on the House closed-circuit television system on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, September 26, 27, and 28, this week at 10 a.m. on channel 6. I urge all of my colleagues to view this brief but highly informative program.

BEARER BONDS

(Mr. MILLER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, for many months now we have wondered what President Reagan was going to do about this mounting deficit, a deficit that may cost the American people in excess of $100 billion in interest alone next year.

Well, the plan is finally starting to come to light. He is asking the Treasury Department to issue bearer bonds to sell around the world so that Amerian taxpayers and others can avoid paying taxes. What he is doing for the first time, is legalizing tax evasion as a means of paying off the national debt. He is hoping that those individuals who do not want their identity known for the purposes of collecting taxes will buy these bearer bonds at reduced interest rates, knowing they do not have to pay taxes; therefore, the interest rate is doubled for high-income Americans.

The Treasury Department is marching forth on this plan to legalize tax evasion. But worse than that, he is introducing U.S. Treasury bonds into the drug market, into the narcotics peddlers. People who can conduct their trade now can pay for their illicit activities with U.S. bearer bonds and know that the Government agencies will have no way of tracing their activities.

Rather than going to the money markets of the world to finance his deficit, President Reagan is determined to go to the black markets of this world.

I hope my colleagues will support the Russo bill to stop the Treasury from issuing bearer bonds.

BEARER BONDS

(Mr. DOWNEY of New York asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, what does the United States of America, the Grand Cayman Islands, and the Netherlands Antilles have in common? What they have in common is that we will all soon become tax havens for people who want to shelter income from taxation.

As the two gentlemen who preceded me pointed out, we now have a program where the U.S. Treasury will issue bearer bonds. You remember it must have been a year and a half ago there was a hue and cry when the President wanted to withhold taxes on savings and interest and dividends. The reason he did that was for very sound tax policy reasons. He wanted to get the people who were not paying taxes to pay taxes.

In light of that initiative, it is very, very difficult to believe that now we have a bearer bond program that will fly in the face of sound tax policy. It will allow people to not pay taxes.

And who are the people who are likely to benefit? Who do you think would like to have the security of U.S. Treasury bonds with the anonymity of a bearer bond? Drug dealers and people who have made money illicitly.

We have opened the door for these people. It is a shame. We need to repeal it. Mr. RUSSO's bill will do it, and I commend my colleagues in the House to that fine piece of legislation.

BEARER BONDS

(Mr. STARK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, the Reagan deficit has run out of money. High interest rates the American public is paying on Main Street has made it impractical for Secretary Regan, directed by President Reagan, to borrow any more money. But they have found a solution. They are going to borrow overseas from foreign bankers and collected American tax cheats who will find it attractive to buy bearer bonds.

So once again the Reagan Treasury has found a gold mine, and the average American gets the shaft while the Reagan cronies get the gold.

THE HOUSE WILL ACT IF GIVEN A CHANCE

(Mr. LOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, in view of the Speaker's statement about the President being a drifter this morning, it seems more appropriate to me to point out that the House, under the liberal Democratic leadership, is the drifter in this town. Look at today's agenda in the House: Three conference reports. And what about Friday's schedule? Will there be anything on it? Do we know? We really do not even know. The Members do not know whether to plan to go home or to stay here. And look at this year's schedule, as a matter of fact. We have been drifting all year.

Not that the House would not act if given the chance. Yesterday, after months, years, of delay and obstruction, when given a chance to vote on the omnibus crime package the House voted overwhelmingly for it.

The significant thing is not so much that it was the President's crime package as was the point that the House, when given a chance to vote when it was brought up on the floor, voted by a wide margin to pass it.

And what about enterprise zones? If the House is given a chance to vote, they will pass it.

What about spousal IRA's? If the House is given a chance to vote on it, they will pass it.

And what about the balanced budget constitutional amendment? Give the House a chance to vote, or accept the driftwood award, Mr. Speaker.

BEARER BONDS

(Mr. SCHUMER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in asking every Member of this House to support the Russo initiative to end bearer bonds being sold overseas.

We all know why people want bearer paper. Some people claim they want privacy. But the real reason is that it cannot be traced by the IRS or anyone else.

In its wisdom, this Congress eliminated bearer paper inside the United States for 1982. But now the administration has come up with a scheme to allow somebody to go to London, and buy, not from an American bank, but from an English bank, bearer U.S. bonds.

We all know why. The administration ought to be ashamed of itself for trying to push this kind of scheme in the wee hours of the legislative session. And perhaps had it not been for the steadfast courage of our colleague, the gentleman from Illinois, this administrative initiative might have passed. But 110 Members have cosponsored a bill to stop bearer bonds before the regulation is implemented. We urge the President: Repeal your plan.

THE HOUSE HAS LET DOWN THE NATION'S POLICE OFFICERS

(Mr. HUGHES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the leadership just pulled from the schedule the so-called armor-piercing bullet legislation because it is somewhat controversial and under apparent pressure from some Members of Congress. I regret that because the armor piercing or so-called cop killer bullet legislation is one of the very important anticrime initiatives in this Congress. We are talking about saving lives—the lives of police officers.

It is unfortunate because the ammunition that we are talking about has no sporting value whatsoever. Because the administration and the NRA agreed upon a bill that would virtually do nothing, we developed a bill that would put teeth in it by banning the sale of this ammunition. It has created some controversy, so controversial that a month out from the election we cannot take it up on the floor of the House.

It is unfortunate because police officers out there every day are on the line facing this kind of ammunition which has no sporting value whatsoever, and because of the self-centeredness of the NRA and the shortsightedness of the administration, we will not have this major anticrime initiative.

We talk about strong law enforcement, but when push comes to shove and we have to face up to a bill that has a little controversy to it, that will do something about the armed felons, we do not face up to it. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that we have let the police officers of this Nation down today.

A TRIBUTE TO EUGENE C. HARRINGTON

(Mr. KLECZKA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, for more than two decades, Mr. Eugene C. Harrington has enlightened readers of the Milwaukee Journal with his words, wit, and excellent reporting. After 26 years with the State's largest newspaper, Gene is retiring and recuperating from an illness.

No shades of a Robert Redford or a Dustin Hoffman made in Hollywood reporter—Gene is a reporter's reporter: He would always stick to the facts and give his topics and subjects fair treatment; you could always count on him having a series of scoops just around budget time; and his pointed questioning was always a reminder for both Democrat and Republican Governors to be well prepared when they held press conferences.

To be sure, Gene's friendly face and warm personality will be missed throughout the halls of the State capitol in Madison, WI. But more important, Gene's dogged determination to be the best reporter covering State government will be truly missed by the paper's readers, his colleagues, and those who serve the public in government.

Without question, Gene set the standard for professional performance among the State capitol press corps, and his contributions to our democratic process are many.

Whatever one might think of the press, a review of the journalistic success of Gene Harrington tells the story of the best and the brightest reporter to cover Wisconsin State government since the early 1960's.

Gene is the kind of reporter and writer that young students of journalism would do well to follow as a role model. And if they did, the lot of journalism today would be much improved.

Mr. Speaker, I salute and thank Gene Harrington for his more than a quarter of a century of service to the readers of the Milwaukee Journal and recommend to my colleagues the following article on him from the September 16 edition of that newspaper.

VETERAN REPORTER HARRINGTON RETIRES

(By Ron Elving)

MADISON WI.—Only rarely does the retirement of one reporter make a difference beyond his own newpaper, a difference felt by everyone who is part of a news beat.

And only rarely is a retiring reporter truly missed, not only by his coworkers but by everyone with whom he has worked and by innumerable sources and subjects of news stories.

But such a rarity is Eugene C. Harrington, dean of the State Capitol press corps and one of the most popular reporters ever to work in the capital city.

His retirement this month follows nearly 22 years in Madison for The Journal—14 of them as the Madison Bureau Chief—and 26 years as the paper's friendliest face.

Harrington, who will be 55 on Friday, suffered a stroke a year ago and has been unable to return to writing. He still hopes to do so, and continues in recuperative therapy.

FRUSTRATING DISABILITY

The stroke initially left him partially paralyzed and unable to speak. Doctors considered surgery for a blood clot on his brain. But his condition stabilized and he recovered his mobility. His ability to speak and write, however, is still impaired.

Perhaps, no other result of illness could have so altered his life. Writing for Harrington seemed as natural as talking, and no one ever enjoyed a more generous gift of gab.

His wit leavened countless meetings and press conferences. An inveterate punster, he is widely known for his limericks, particularly those written for presentation upon St. Patrick's Day, a holiday close to Harrington's Irish heart. This year, a limerick contest was held in his honor at Gov. Earl's St. Patrick's Day party.

Harrington's recovery has been followed closely by much of official Madison. At a media dinner last winter, Earl spotted the convalescent Harrington at the edge of the large crowd.

"We're all looking forward to the day we'll see Gene back in the Capitol," he said. The hall erupted in an ovation. Someone observed it was the first time he had heard that kind of applause for a reporter.

KNEW EVERYONE

The measure of Harrington's involvement with people could be taken any day by stepping out with him for lunch. Any noon hour with him was a hour half spent in greeting the Capitol Square passers-by—most of whom he seemed to know by name.

Besides his boundless enjoyment of other people, Harington may be best known for his enthusiasm for work. He seemed immune to the long hours that covering the Legislature often required.

"I never wanted to be anything but a reporter," he likes to say. "I always thought that was the greatest job in the world."

He often professed to be puzzled that anyone who ever had the chance to be a reporter would ever choose to be anything else.

Harrington began his newspaper career in Philadelphia, the city of his birth, where his father had been an ad salesman for the old Evening Bulletin.

He worked as a copyboy and as a reporter for the Bulletin. The Korean War intervened and he spent two years in the Army, eight months of that time in Korea.

Returning home, he enrolled at the College of Journalism at Marquette University. He took his degree there, but, more importantly, he met Rita Katharine Luderus, whom he married in 1958.

JOINED JOURNAL IN 1958

The Harringtons have seven children: Moira, 22, Timothy, 20, Sheilah, 17, Dennis, 14, Eileen, 10, Bridget, 8. Another son, Owen, died at the age of 7 in a 1972 drowning accident.

After graduation, Harrington spent a year traveling the British Isles on a survey of Catholic publications. He also wrote for the Catholic weeklies The Tablet and The Universe.

In 1958, he joined the staff of The Journal as a reporter for the Home section. After a stint as a general assignment reporter, he moved to the Madison bureau at the beginning of 1963, becoming chief of the bureau four years later.

In 1976, he and fellow Madison reporter Charles E. Friederich won the Richard Davis Award, the highest honor for a member of The Journal's staff. The citation recognized the pair for their consistently outstanding coverage of the state government.

When asked about his most rewarding experiences, Harrington, like many reporters, recalls the stories that were most trying. He mentions the takeover of the Capitol by civil rights protesters led by Father James Groppi in 1969, the campus riots that followed the Cambodian invasion in 1970 and the long fights for state university merger and government reorganization in the early 1970s.

MUSIC LOVER, SPORTS FAN

A central joy in Harrington's life has been his love for music. He wrote a column on classical records for the student newspaper at Marquette. Fond of opera and other vocal music, he would sometimes burst into an aria while working late at his desk in the bureau.

When he was first allowed hospital visitors after his stroke, the first word he clearly spoke to them—with a gesture to the radio at his bedside—was "Beethoven."

He also has been a serious follower of sports and a dogged partisan of the teams for his native Philadelphia. Among these, he has been especially true to the Phillies, a frequent source of frustration. In basketball, while he rooted for several teams, his favorite remained the Marquette Warriors.

Friends and colleagues are sponsoring a tribute to Harrington Sept. 26 in Madison. More than 200 well-wishers have already subscribed, with fresh stacks of reservations arriving in the bureau daily.

If reporters wore jerseys instead of suitcoats and ties, Harrington's number would be retired along with him. And it is hard to imagine him wearing anything but Number One.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. CORCORAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall not object, but on my reservation I would yield to the gentleman from Indiana to explain what he proposes to do.

Mr. SHARP. As the gentleman knows, this bill passed the House by voice vote earlier in the year with the concurrence of both the Public Works and Transportation Committee and the Energy and Commerce Committee with the majority and minority in agreement. The only differences embodied in the Senate amendment are actually a reduction in the amount of money authorized, a reduction of $110,000, and second, a clarification on the Oxley amendment that deals with inspection of some of the earliest pipelines in the country which we believe are potentially some of the most dangerous.

Mr. Speaker, the pipeline safety authorization bill before us is a compromise worked out between the two Houses. It is very similar to the bill passed by the House.

On what I believe is a significant point, the other body agreed with our position that only a 1-year authorization is warranted, rather than the 2-year authorization they had proposed. The have now agreed with us that the serious problems in program management require close congressional oversight, and that a 1-year authorization will make the Department of Transportation take our concerns more seriously.

On another matter of difference between the Houses, this bill authorizes a total of $8,610,000, a decrease of $110,000 over the bill passed by the House. I believe this figure more accurately measures the cost of carrying out the programs included in the House-passed bill.

Finally, this bill adds clarifying language while keeping the substance of the amendment added by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY] regarding inspection of older pipelines.

This is an important program, and I believe it is a good bill. We have had the close cooperation of our colleagues on the other side of the aisle. I urge adoption of the bill.

Mr. CORCORAN. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCEWEN].

● Mr. MCEWEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of S. 2688, a bill to reauthorize the Pipeline Safety Act of 1968. Let me congratulate my distinguished colleague on the Energy and Commerce Committee, Mr. OXLEY, for adding an amendment which specifically addresses the safety hazards of natural gas pipelines constructed prior to 1983.

As you may recall, the House first passed H.R. 5313 on June 25. The companion bill in the Senate, however, did not include our amendment, which would require the owners of all pre-1938 interstate pipelines to report the location and condition of those lines to the Department of Transportation. If a potential safety problem was discovered, the DOT would be required to inspect the line in question and take appropriate corrective action. Fortunately, after extensive negotiation and certain clarifying changes in the original language, the Senate has agreed to this important amendment. Again, let me commend my colleague for his efforts in achieving this end.

The bill currently before us represents a compromise achieved between the House and Senate. We believe it offers a means toward solving the potentially dangerous conditions posed by some of the oldest pipelines in our country. I am sure that my colleagues in the House will recognize the importance of a sound interstate pipeline system in this country and vote for final passage of this bill.●

Mr. CORCORAN. Mr. Speaker, let me just say on my reservation that the gentleman from Indiana has correctly explained the situation involving the two Houses. The legislation before us, if his motion is adopted, would make this a 1-year authorization at fiscally responsible levels giving us an opportunity to review along with the General Accounting Office their concerns about the Pipeline Safety Act.

On June 25, 1984, the House suspended the rules and passed legislation reauthorizing the Natural Gas and Hazardous Liquid Pipeline Safety Acts. Last Friday, September 21, the other body passed the House legislation with an amendment. This amendment reconciles the Senate- and House-passed versions of this legislation.

Like the original House legislation, this legislation provides a 1-year authorization at fiscally responsible levels. The authorizing committees believe that a 1-year authorization is appropriate because we plan to review the Department of Transportation's response to criticism by the General Accounting Office of the Pipeline Safety Program. We will also have the opportunity to consider whether any or all of this program should be funded by user fees, a matter being studied by the General Accounting Office at the request of my colleague from California, Mr. DANNEMEYER.

This is worthy legislation with bipartisan support and a credit to both the Energy and Commerce Committee and the Public Works and Transportation Committee.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

● Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I urge the support of our colleagues today for S. 2688, authorizing funds to implement the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act of 1968 and the Hazardous Liquid Pipeline Safety Act of 1979.

Generally speaking, the industries which are regulated pursuant to these acts enjoy good safety records. There are over 2,300 operators in the natural gas pipeline network which covers over 1.5 million miles; of which almost 25,000 miles are gathering lines, 280,000 are transmission lines, 800,000 miles are distribution lines and 480,000 miles are gas service lines.

Under the Hazardous Liquid Pipeline Safety Act, the Department of Transportation is charged with overseeing the safe operation of 230 operators and over 225,000 miles of pipeline.

Despite these staggering quantities of pipeline, which transport about 25 percent of the Nation's total freight tonnage and over 50 percent of our energy sources, the number of line failures is relatively modest. There are between 1,600 and 1,800 natural gas pipeline failures a year, and 200 hazardous liquid line failures.

The problem is that when these failures do occur, the potential for damage can be catastrophic. It is unquestionably a legitimate role of the Federal Government to try and assure that such accidents don't happen. Because this is a role that has been so effectively shared with the States with respect to the natural gas pipeline industry, I am pleased that this legislation extends that principle by authorizing $500,000 for a State grant program authorized in the Hazardous Liquids Pipeline Safety Act.

At our subcommittee hearing on March 21, we received testimony indicating how effective the Federal-State partnership has been at protecting the public from failures in natural gas pipelines. Spokesmen from that industry unhesitatingly testified to the effectiveness of that partnership. And spokesmen for the State agencies indicated their desire to make the approach work to protect the people of this country from failure in hazardous liquid pipelines.

I am gratified, Mr. Speaker, that our colleagues on both sides of the aisle, on the Public Works Committee and on the Energy and Commerce Committee, and in the Senate as well, recognize the importance and support the funding of the State grant-in-aid program for hazardous liquid pipeline safety. Although that is just one provision of this legislation, its inclusion is indicative of the thought and the work that has gone into S. 2688. I urge that it pass today.●

● Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the pipeline safety authorization currently before the House. As my colleagues may recall, we passed a similar bill last June 25, including an amendment I offered in committee to require the Secretary of Transportation to take corrective actions if unsafe pipeline conditions are found.

The Senate proceeded to omit my amendment in its companion bill. But I am pleased to inform my colleagues that, after lengthy negotiations with the Senate Commerce Committee and industry, we have made certain certifications to the original language which are acceptable to all parties.

My amendment, as included in this bill, requires the owners and operators of pre-1940 pipelines to report all their lines completed prior to January 1, 1940, to the Secretary of Transportation. These reports are to include all pertinent data, including leak reports and surveys, by which the Secretary may deem each pre-1940 pipeline to be hazardous to life or property within the meaning of section 12(b) of the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act of 1968.

If, after data submission and physical inspection, the Secretary determines a specific pipeline to pose such hazard, he/she may take the appropriate action pursuant to the Pipeline Safety Act to correct that unsafe condition.

I know my colleagues in the House and the other body share my concerns for the continuance of safe interstate pipelines across this country. These classifications in the bill will not unduly burden pipeline owners and operators, and will give the Secretary of Transportation the means to determine whether deteriorated pipelines, such as the Harpster Line in my district, is a significant problem across the Nation. This clean version with its clarifications of the Oxley amendment language is supported by the minority and majority of both Houses, and has been accepted by most members of the pipeline industry.

I urge the bill's swift adoption today.●

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks, and include extraneous matter, on the Senate bill, S. 2688.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

SEC. 108. The Arms Export Control Act shall be administered as if section 743A of the Department of Defense Appropriation Act, 1984 (Public Law 98-212; 96 Stat. 1858) had not been enacted into law.

SEC. 109. Section 765(c) of the Department of Defense Appropriation Act, 1984 (Public Law 98-212), is hereby repealed.

POLICY CONCERNING ACQUISITION OF ADDITIONAL MX MISSILES

SEC. 110. (a) Subject to subsections (b) and (c), of the funds appropriated pursuant to the authorization of appropriations in section 103 for procurement of missiles for the Air Force, $2,500,000,000 may be used for the MX missile program, including acquisition of not more than 21 additional operational MX missiles.

(b) Except as provided in subsection (c), none of the $2,500,000,000 described in subsection (a) may be obligated for the procurement of additional operational MX missiles unless—

(1) after March 1, 1985, the President submits to Congress a report described in subsection (e);

(2) a joint resolution approving the obligation of those funds is enacted as provided for in this section; and

(3) a second joint resolution is enacted as provided for in the Department of Defense Appropriation Act, 1985 (or in a joint resolution providing funds for the Department of Defense for fiscal year 1985), further approving the obligation of those funds.

(c) Of the $2,500,000,000 described in subsection (a), $1,000,000,000 may be obligated only for—

(1) procurement related to the deployment of the 21 MX missiles for which funds were authorized and appropriated for fiscal year 1984;

(2) advance procurement of parts and materials for the MX missile program and for the maintenance of the MX missile program contractor base; and

(3) spare parts for the MX missile program.

(d)(1) For the purpose of subsection (b)(2), "joint resolution" means only a joint resolution introduced after the date on which the report of the President under subsection (b)(1) is received by Congress the matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows: "That subject to the enactment (after the enactment of this joint resolution) of a joint resolution further approving the obligation of such funds, the Congress approves the obligation of funds appropriated for fiscal year 1985 for the procurement of additional operational MX missiles (in addition to the funds previously authorized to be obligated).".

(2) A resolution described in paragraph (1) introduced in the House of Representatives shall be referred to the Committee on Armed Services of the House of Representatives. A resolution described in paragraph (1) introduced in the Senate shall be referred to the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate. Such a resolution may not be reported before the 8th day after its introduction.

(3) If the committee to which is referred a resolution described in paragraph (1) has not reported such resolution (or an identical resolution) at the end of 15 calendar days after its introduction or at the end of the first day after there has been reported to the House involved a joint resolution approving the further obligation of funds for the procurement of operational MX missiles as provided for in the Department of Defense Appropriation Act, 1985 (or in a joint resolution providing funds for the Department of Defense for fiscal year 1985), whichever is earlier, such committee shall be deemed to be discharged from further consideration of such resolution and such resolution shall be placed on the appropriate calendar of the House involved.

(4)(A) When the committee to which a resolution is referred has reported, or has been deemed to be discharged (under paragraph (3)) from further consideration of, a resolution described in paragraph (1), it is at any time thereafter in order (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) for any Member of the respective House to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution, and all points of order against the resolution (and against consideration of the resolution) are waived. The motion is highly privileged in the House of Representatives and is privileged in the Senate and is not debatable. The motion is not subject to amendment, or to a motion to postpone, or to a motion to proceed to the consideration of other business. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to shall not be in order. If a motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution is agreed to, the resolution shall remain the unfinished business of the respective House until disposed of.

(B) Debate on the resolution, and on all debatable motions and appeals in connection therewith, shall be limited to not more than 10 hours, which shall be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the resolution. A motion further to limit debate is in order and not debatable. An amendment to, or a motion to postpone, or a motion to proceed to the consideration of other business, or a motion to recommit the resolution is not in order. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution is agreed to or disagreed to is not in order.

(C) Immediately following the conclusion of the debate on a resolution described in paragraph (1), and a single quorum call at the conclusion of the debate if requested in accordance with the rules of the appropriate

House, the vote on final passage of the resolution shall occur.

(D) Appeals from the decisions of the Chair relating to the application of the rules of the Senate or the House of Representatives, as the case may be, to the procedure relating to a resolution described in paragraph (1) shall be decided without debate.

(5) If, before the passage by one House of a resolution of that House described in paragraph (1), that House receives from the other House a resolution described in paragraph (1), then the following procedures shall apply:

(A) The resolution of the other House shall not be referred to a committee.

(B) With respect to a resolution described in paragraph (1) of the House receiving the resolution—

(i) the procedure in that House shall be the same as if no resolution had been received from the other House; but

(ii) the vote on final passage shall be on the resolution of the other House.

(6) This subsection is enacted by Congress—

(A) as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the Senate and House of Representatives, respectively, and as such it is deemed a part of the rules of each House, respectively, but applicable only with respect to the procedure to be followed in that House in the case of a resolution described in paragraph (1), and it supercedes other rules only to the extent that it is inconsistent with such rules; and

(B) with full recognition of the constitutional right of either House to change the rules (so far as relating to the procedure of that House) at any time, in the same manner and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of the that House.

(e) A report under subsection (b)(1) shall include—

(1) a statement that the President has determined that further acquisition of operational missiles under the MX missile program is in the national security interest of the United States and is consistent with United States arms control policy;

(2) findings of the President concerning the effect of the acquisition and deployment of such missiles on the vulnerability of the United States land-based intercontinental ballistic missile force;

(3) a discussion of the basing mode for the MX missile (and related improvements in silo-hardening technology) and of proposals for the basing mode for the small, single-warhead intercontinental ballistic missile; and

(4) to the extent not covered under paragraphs (1) through (3), the assessment of the President submitted pursuant to subsection (g)(2).

(f) Obligation for the MX missile program of funds appropriated for fiscal year 1985 is subject to section 1231 of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1984 (Public Law 98-94; 97 Stat. 693).

(g)(1) Section 1231(e) of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1984 (Public Law 98-94; 97 Stat. 694) is amended—

(A) by striking out "the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives" and inserting in lieu thereof "Congress";

(B) by striking out "the date of the enactment of this Act" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 24, 1983,";

(C) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (B);

(D) by striking out the period at the end of clause (C) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(D) by adding at the end thereof the following new clause:

"(D) the progress of efforts to develop more survivable basing modes for the MX and other intercontinental missiles, including a new small mobile intercontinental ballistic missile.".

(2) The first assessment under section 1231(e) of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1985, submitted after the date of the enactment of this Act shall be submitted as part of the report described in subsection (e) (rather than coincident with any request for funds for the procurement of MX missiles submitted to Congress before the submission of that report).

A member with dependents who is assigned to an unaccompanied tour of duty outside the United States is entitled to a variable housing allowance while serving that tour of duty for any period during which the member's dependents reside in an area of the United States where, if the member were assigned to duty in that area, the member would be entitled to receive a variable housing allowance.

"(2) In the case of a member with dependents—

"(A) who is assigned to duty inside the United States the location or the circumstances of which make it necessary that his dependents reside at another location; and

"(B) whose dependents reside in an area of the United States where, if the member were assigned to duty in that area, the member would be entitled to receive a variable housing allowance at a rate other than the rate to which the member is entitled (if at all) in the area of his duty assignment, the member may be paid a variable housing allowance as if he were assigned to duty in the area in which his dependents reside if the Secretary concerned determines (under regulations prescribed under subsection (e) of this section) that it would be inequitable to base the member's entitlement to, and amount of, variable housing allowance on the area to which the member is assigned.

"(3) In the case of a member with dependents—

"(A) who is assigned to an unaccompanied tour of duty in Alaska or Hawaii; and

"(B) who would, if his duty station were outside the United States, be entitled to a family separation allowance under section 427(a) of this title, the member may be paid a variable housing allowance at the rate applicable to a member without dependents serving in the same grade and at the same location. Payment of a variable housing allowance under this paragraph shall be in addition to any allowance or per diem to which the member otherwise may be entitled under this title.

"(b) A member of a uniformed service is not entitled to a variable housing allowance—

"(1) in the case of a member who makes a change in permanent duty station, for the number of days that travel is authorized between permanent duty stations (under regulations prescribed under subsection (e) of this section);

"(2) in the case of a member with dependents, if the member (A) is assigned to unaccompanied personnel housing of the United States (or an unaccompanied personnel housing facility under the jurisdiction of a uniformed service) appropriate to his grade, rank, or rating and adequate for himself, and (B) is authorized the basic allowance for quarters at the rate established for a member with dependents solely by reason of a court order requiring the member to pay support for dependents; or

"(3) in the case of a member of a reserve component, while on active duty under a call or order to active duty specifying a period of less than 140 days.

"(c)(1) The monthly amount of a variable housing allowance under this section for a member of a uniformed service with respect to an area is the difference between (A) the median monthly cost of housing in that area for members of the uniformed services serving in the same pay grade as that member, and (B) 80 percent of the median monthly cost of housing in the United States for members of the uniformed services serving in the same pay grade as that member.

"(2) The rates of variable housing allowance shall be reduced as necessary to comply with subsection (d) of this section.

"(3) The effective date of any adjustment in rates of variable housing allowance because of a redetermination of median monthly costs of housing under this subsection shall be the same as the effective date of the next increase after such redetermination in the basic allowances for quarters.

"(4) For the purposes of this section, an area shall be considered to be a high housing cost area with respect to a member of a uniformed service whenever the median monthly cost of housing in that area for members of the uniformed services serving in the same pay grade as that member exceeds 80 percent of the median monthly cost of housing in the United States for members of the uniformed services serving in the same pay grade as that member.

"(5) Any reduction required under paragraph (2) of this subsection and any determination of median monthly costs of housing under this subsection shall be made under regulations prescribed under subsection (e) of this section.

"(d)(1) The total amount that may be paid for a fiscal year for the variable housing allowance authorized members of the uniformed services by this section is the product of—

"(A) the total amount authorized to be paid for such allowance for the preceding fiscal year (as adjusted under paragraph (3) of this subsection); and

"(B) a fraction—

"(i) the numerator of which is the military housing cost index for October of the preceding fiscal year; and

"(ii) the denominator of which is the military housing cost index for October of the fiscal year before the preceding fiscal year.

"(2) The military housing cost index is the housing component of the Consumer Price Index (as determined by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor), as adjusted under regulations prescribed under subsection (e) of this section. Such regulations may assign weights to the elements of that housing component other than those assigned by the Secretary of Labor in order more appropriately to reflect the distribution of elements of housing costs of members of the uniformed services.

"(3) In making a determination under paragraph (1) of this subsection for a fiscal year, the amount authorized to be paid for the preceding fiscal year for the variable housing allowance shall be adjusted to reflect changes during the year for which the determination is made in the number, grade distribution, and dependency status of members of the uniformed services entitled to variable housing allowance from the number of such members during the preceding fiscal year. Adjustments under this paragraph shall be made in accordance with regulations prescribed under subsection (e) of this section.

(b) Subsection (a) shall apply with respect to the transportation of motor vehicles during the period beginning with the month after the month in which this Act is enacted and ending with September 1985. After that period transportation of motor vehicles from Guam under the circumstances described in subsection (a) may be provided at Government expense only as specifically authorized by law after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) Not later than February 15, 1985, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives a report with respect to the transportation through Guam of motor vehicles owned by members of the Armed Forces. The report shall include—

PERSONAL VEHICLES OF UNITED STATES MILITARY PERSONNEL IN JAPAN

SEC. 653. (a) The Congress finds that—

(2) as a result of the restriction referred to in clause (1), members of the Armed Forces typically need to sell their personal motor vehicles before departing the United States to report to a duty station in Japan, to purchase vehicles in Japan for personal use while stationed in Japan, to sell such purchased vehicles before departing Japan to return to the United States, and to purchase vehicles in the United States upon the return;

(3) members of the Armed Forces incur a substantial financial burden in connection with the repeated sale and replacement of personal vehicles;

(4) the United States permits members of the Armed Forces of foreign nations to bring unmodified vehicles into the United States for their personal use while assigned to duty stations in the United States; and

(5) the United States provides a substantial contribution to the defense of Japan and the waters surrounding Japan.

(b) Considering the findings set out in subsection (a), it is the sense of the Congress that the President, acting through the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of State, should enter into negotiations with the Government of Japan for the purpose of obtaining the agreement of such government not to require the modification of the personal motor vehicles of members of the Armed Forces of the United States brought into Japan for their personal use while stationed in Japan.

(c) Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of State shall transmit to the Congress a written report relating to the matters described in subsection (a). The report shall include—

"(c) A member or former member may have in effect at any time only one request for withholding under this section and may not have more than two such requests in effect during any one calendar year.

"(d)(1) This section does not give the consent of the United States to the application of a statute that imposes more burdensome requirements on the United States than on employers generally or that subjects the United States or any member or former member entitled to retired or retainer pay to a penalty or liability because of this section.

"(2) The Secretary concerned may not accept pay from a State for services performed in withholding State income taxes from retired or retainer pay.

"(3) Any amount erroneously withheld from retired or retainer pay and paid to a State by the Secretary concerned shall be repaid by the State in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary concerned.

Moneys deposited into the Fund under this subsection shall be deemed to have been covered into the Fund under section 9(b) of the Act.

TITLE X—MATTERS RELATING TO NATO AND OTHER ALLIES

SENSE OF CONGRESS RELATING TO INCREASE IN DEFENSE SPENDING BY UNITED STATES ALLIES

SEC. 1001. It is the sense of Congress that the President—

(1) should call on the pertinent member nations of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to meet or exceed their pledges for an annual increase in defense spending during fiscal years 1984 and 1985 of at least 3 percent real growth; and

(2) should call on Japan to further increase its defense spending during fiscal years 1984 and 1985; in furtherance of increased unity, equitable sharing of the common defense burden, and international stability.

IMPROVEMENTS TO NATO CONVENTIONAL CAPABILITY

SEC. 1002. (a) The Congress finds—

(1) that the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) should improve its conventional defense capability so as to lengthen the period of time that Western Europe can be defended by conventional forces without the necessity of resorting to the early use of nuclear weapons in the event of a non-nuclear attack on any NATO member country;

(2) that fulfillment by NATO member nations of their goals and commitments to increase defense spending, improve conventional sustainability, and provide support facilities in Western Europe for rapid reinforcements from the United States is crucial to accomplishing that objective; and

(3) that an increase over current United States military personnel levels in European member nations of NATO can be justified only if these goals and commitments are substantially met by NATO member nations (other than the United States).

(b) The Congress urges the President and the Secretary of Defense to continue to encourage member nations of NATO (other than the United States) to work expeditiously to fulfill the following commitments they have undertaken:

(1) To achieve and maintain an annual increase in their defense spending of at least 3 percent, after inflation.

(2) To acquire a 30-day supply of air and ground munitions among those NATO members which have committed forces to the Northern, Center, and Southern Regions.

(3) To construction of the number of minimum essential and emergency operating facilities and semihardened aircraft shelters in Western Europe required by NATO Ministerial Guidance to support, under NATO/SHAPE standards, as a minimum, the annual commitment of United States reinforcing tactical aircraft.

(c)(1) After September 30, 1985, none of the funds appropriated pursuant to an authorization contained in this Act or any other Act enacted after the date of the enactment of this Act may be used to support an end strength level of members of the Armed Forces of the United States assigned to permanent duty ashore in European member nations of NATO at any level exceeding a permanent ceiling of 326,414.

(2) If the Secretary of Defense certifies to the Congress in writing during any fiscal year after fiscal year 1985 that during the previous fiscal year the member nations of NATO (other than the United States) have undertaken significant measures to improve their conventional defense capacity consistent with the goals set forth in subsection (b) which contributes to lengthening the time period between an armed attack on any NATO country and the time the Supreme Allied Commander, Europe, would have to request the release and use of nuclear weapons, the Congress would give strong consideration to authorizing an increase in the permanent ceiling prescribed in paragraph (1) for fiscal years after such fiscal year.

(d)(1) Not later than April 1, 1985, and each year thereafter, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Sencte and House of Representatives a report on the status, as of January 1 of the year in which the report is submitted, of the following matters:

(A) The number of days of supply of the ground and aerial munitions in hand or on order of the member nations of NATO (other than the United States) which have committed forces to the Northern, Center, and Southern Regions.

(B) The number of facilities and semihardened aircraft shelters completed or under construction as they relate to the United States commitment of reinforcing aircraft in the United States Defense Planning Questionnaire (DPQ) Response of the previous year.

(2)(A) Beginning with the budget submitted to Congress for fiscal year 1986, but not later than April 1, 1985, and each year thereafter, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress a report on the status and cost of the United States commitment to NATO as reflected in the DPQ Response and in the defense budget request. The report shall be an annual update of the Department of Defense Report entitled "United States Expenditures in Support of NATO", first submitted to the Congress in June 1984 pursuant to section 1107 of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1984 (Public Law 98-94; 97 Stat. 677). In addition to the information required by that section, each such report shall include information which specifically identifies those items in the Secretary of Defense's procurement budget request that are in support of United States forces committed to or earmarked for NATO.

(B) In addition to the requirements of subparagraph (A), the Secretary of Defense shall include in the report an assessment of the performance of the members of NATO (other than the United States) in the following areas:

(i) Allied contributions to the common defense.

(ii) Improvement in sustainability and support for United States reinforcing tactical aircraft.

(iii) Meeting NATO force goals.

(iv) Increasing NATO infrastructure funding.

(v) Improvements in air base defenses.

(vi) Increasing trained manpower levels, particularly reserves.

(vii) Increasing war reserve materiel.

(viii) Improving NATO's ability to neutralize enemy follow-on forces, including use of emerging technologies.

(ix) Improvements in mine/counter mine capability.

(x) Improvements in offensive counter air capability.

(e)(1) The Congress finds that a viable "two-way street" of defense procurement improves NATO interoperability and therefore is important to overall improvements in conventional defense.

(2)(A) In addition to any funds appropriated pursuant to the authorization contained in section 201 for the activities of the Director of Test and Evaluation, Defense, the Director may use an additional amount, not to exceed $50,000,000, to acquire certain types of weapons, subsystems, and munitions of European NATO manufacture for side-by-side testing with comparable United States manufactured items. Such additional amount shall be derived from any funds appropriated pursuant to an authorization contained in this Act. Items that may be acquired under this paragraph include submunitions and dispensers, anti-tank and anti-armor guided missiles, mines, runway-cratering devices, torpedoes, mortar systems, light armored vehicles, and high-velocity anti-tank guns).

(f)(1) This section shall not apply in the event of a declaration of war or an armed attack on any NATO member country.

(2) This section may be waived by the President if he declares an emergency and immediately informs the Congress of his action and the reasons therefor.

REPORT ON ALLIED CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE COMMON DEFENSE

SEC. 1003. (a) In recognition of the increasing military threat faced by the Western World and in view of the growth, relative to the United States, in the economic strength of Japan, Canada, and a number of Western European countries which has occurred since the signing of the North Atlantic Treaty on April 4, 1949, and the Mutual Cooperation and Security Treaty between Japan and the United States on January 19, 1960, it is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) the burdens of mutual defense now assumed by some of the countries allied with the United States under those agreements are not commensurate with their economic resources;

(2) since May 1978, when each member nation of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) agreed to increase real defense spending annually in the range of 3 percent, most NATO members, except for the United States, have failed to meet the 3 percent real growth commitment consistently;

(3) since May 1981, when the Government of Japan established its policy to defend the air and sea lines of communication out to 1,000 nautical miles from the coast of Japan, progress to develop the necessary self-defense capabilities to fulfill that pledge has been extremely disappointing;

(4) Japan is the ally of the United States with the greatest potential for improving its self-defense capabilities and should, therefore, rapidly increase its annual defense spending to the levels required to fulfill that pledge and to enable Japan to be capable of an effective conventional self-defense capability by 1990, including the capability to carry out its 1,000-mile defense policy, a development that would be consonant not only with Japan's current prominent position in the family of nations but also with its unique sensibilities on the issues of war and peace, sensibilities that are recognized and respected by the people of the United States; and

(5) the continued unwillingness of such countries to increase their contributions to the common defense to more appropriate levels will endanger the vitality, effectiveness, and cohesion of the alliances between those countries and the United States.

(b) It is further the sense of the Congress that the President should seek from each signatory country (other than the United States) of the two treaties referred to in subsection (a) acceptance of international security responsibilities and an agreement to make contributions to the common defense which are commensurate with the economic resources of such country, including, when appropriate, an increase in host nation support.

(c) The Secretary of Defense shall submit to the Congress each year, not later than March 1, a classified report containing—

(1) a comparison of the fair and equitable shares of the mutual defense burdens of these alliances that should be borne by the United States, by other member nations of NATO, and by Japan, based upon economic strength and other relevant factors, and the actual defense efforts of each nation together with an explanation of disparities that currently exist and their impact on mutual defense efforts;

(2) a description of efforts by the United States and the efforts of other members of the alliances to eliminate any existing disparities;

(3) projected estimates of the real growth in defense spending for the fiscal year in which the report is submitted for each NATO member nation;

(4) a description of the defense-related initiatives undertaken by each NATO member nation within the real growth in defense spending of such nation in the fiscal year immediately preceding the fiscal year in which the report is submitted;

(5) an explanation of those instances in which the commitments to real growth in defense spending have not been realized and a description of efforts being made by the United States to ensure fulfillment of these important NATO commitments;

(6) a description of the activities of each NATO member and Japan to enhance the security and stability of the Southwest Asia region and to assume additional missions for their own defense as the United States allocates additional resources to the mission of protecting Western interests in world areas not covered by the system of Western Alliances; and

(7) a description of what additional actions the executive branch plans to take should the efforts by the United States referred to in clauses (2) and (5) fail, and, in those instances where such additional actions do not include consideration of the repositioning of American troops, a detailed explanation as to why such repositioning is not being so considered.

(d) The Secretary of Defense shall also submit to the Congress not more than 30 days after the submission of the report required under subsection (a) an unclassified report containing the matters set forth in clauses (1) through (7) of such subsection.

NATO SEASPARROW COOPERATIVE PROGRAM

SEC. 1004. The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to continue participation, in accordance with current operating procedures, in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization SEASPARROW Surface Missile System Cooperative Consortium, as described in the Memorandum of Understanding between the United States, Denmark, Norway, Italy, the Netherlands, Belgium, Canada, Greece, and Federal Republic of Germany, signed by the United States on June 6, 1968, and the Memorandum of Understanding between the same countries, signed by the United States on May 20, 1977.

PROCUREMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS SUPPORT AND RELATED SUPPLIES AND SERVICES

SEC. 1005. (a) Chapter 141 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§2401a. Procurement of communications support and related supplies and services

"(a) As an alternative means of obtaining communications support and related supplies and services, the Secretary of Defense, subject to the approval of the Secretary of State, may enter into an arrangement with the Minister of Defense or other appropriate official of any allied country or with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), under which, in return for being provided communications support and related supplies and services, the United States would agree to provide to such country or NATO an equivalent value of communications support and related supplies and services.

"(b) Any arrangement entered into under this section shall require that any accrued credits and liabilities resulting from an unequal exchange of communications support and related supplies and services during the term of such arrangement would be liquidated by direct payment to the party having provided the greater amount of communications support and related supplies and services. Payments received by the United States shall be credited to the appropriation from which such communications support and related supplies and services have been provided.

"(c) The Secretary of Defense shall submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives copies of all documents evidencing an arrangement entered into under subsection (a) not later than 45 days after entering into such an arrangement.

"(d) In this section, 'allied country' means—

"(1) a country that is a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, or

"(2) Australia, New Zealand, Japan, or the Republic of Korea.".

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"2401a. Procurement of communications support and related supplies and services.".

POLICY ON ARMAMENTS COOPERATION WITH NATO MEMBER COUNTRIES

SEC. 1006. Not later than May 1, 1985, the Secretary of Defense shall transmit to Congress a report setting forth a comprehensive proposal by which the United States and NATO member countries may achieve the objectives described in section 1122(b) of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1983 (Public Law 97-252; 96 Stat. 755).

AUTHORITY OF SECRETARY OF DEFENSE IN CONNECTION WITH COOPERATIVE AGREEMENTS ON AIR DEFENSE IN CENTRAL EUROPE

SEC. 1007. (a) During fiscal year 1985, the Secretary of Defense may carry out the European air defense agreements. In carrying out those agreements during that year, the Secretary—

(1) may provide without monetary charge to the Federal Republic of Germany articles and services as specified in the agreements; and

(2) may accept from the Federal Republic of Germany (in return for the articles and services provided under paragraph (1)) articles and services as specified in the agreements.

(b) In connection with the administration of the European air defense agreements during fiscal year 1985, the Secretary of Defense may—

(1) waive any surcharge for administrative services otherwise chargeable under section 21(e)(1)(A) of the Arms Export Control Act (22 U.S.C. 2761(e)(1)(A));

(2) waive any charge not otherwise waived for services associated with contract administration for the sale under the Arms Export Control Act of Patriot air defense missile fire units to the Federal Republic of Germany contemplated in the agreements;

(3) use, to the extent contemplated in the agreements, the NATO Maintenance and Supply Agency (A) for the supply of logistic support in Europe for the Patriot missile system, and (B) for the acquisition of such logistic support, to the extent that the Secretary determines that the procedures of that agency governing such supply and acquisition are appropriate;

(4) share, to the extent contemplated in the agreements, the costs of set-up charges of facilities for use by that agency to perform depot-level support of Patriot missile fire units in Europe; and

(5) deliver to the Federal Republic of Germany one Patriot missile fire unit configured for training, to be purchased by the Federal Republic of Germany under the Arms Export Control Act as contemplated in the agreements, without regard to the requirement in section 22 of that Act (22 U.S.C. 2762) for payment in advance of delivery for any purchase under that Act.

(c) Notwithstanding the rate required to be charged under section 21 of the Arms Export Control Act for services furnished by the United States, in the case of the 14 Patriot missile fire units which the Federal Republic of Germany purchases from the United States under that Act as contemplated in the European air defense agreements, the rate charged by the Secretary of Defense for packing, crating, handling, and transportation services associated with that purchase may not exceed the established Department of Defense rate for such services.

(d) For the purposes of this section, the term "European air defense agreements" means (1) the agreement entitled "Agreement between the Secretary of Defense of the United States of America and the Minister of Defense of the Federal Republic of Germany on Cooperative Measures for Enhancing Air Defense for Central Europe", signed on December 6, 1983, and (2) the agreement entitled "Agreement between the Secretary of Defense of the United States of America and the Federal Minister of Defense of the Federal Republic of Germany in implementation of the 6 December 1983 Agreement on Cooperative Measures for Enhancing Air Defense for Central Europe", signed on July 12, 1984.

(e) The authority of the Secretary of Defense to enter into contracts under the European air defense agreements is available only to the extent that appropriated funds are otherwise available for that purpose.

TITLE XI—MATTERS RELATING TO ARMS CONTROL

REPORT ON STRATEGIC NUCLEAR SUBMARINE FORCE

SEC. 1101. Not later than April 1, 1985, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives a report on the survivability of the United States strategic nuclear ballistic missile submarine force. The report shall address whether there are grounds for adjusting, in short or long-range terms, strategic force plans of the United States based on any vulnerability or potential vulnerability of such force. The report shall also examine the feasibility and desirability of enhancing the survivability of such force through measures that would affect antisubmarine warfare, including the nature of the patrols and the rules of engagement of attack submarines and the nature of the patrols and the rules of engagement of ballistic missile submarines.

ANNUAL REPORT ON STRATEGIC DEFENSE PROGRAMS

SEC. 1102. At the time of the submission by the Secretary of Defense to the Congress of his annual budget presentation materials for each fiscal year beginning with fiscal year 1986 and ending with fiscal year 1990 (but not later than March 15 of the calendar year in which such fiscal year begins), the Secretary of Defense shall transmit to the Committee on Armed Services and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Armed Services and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate a report on the programs that constitute the Strategic Defense Initiative and other programs, if any, relating to defense against strategic ballistic missiles. Each such report shall include—

(1) details of all programs and projects included in the Strategic Defense Initiative or relating to defense against strategic ballistic missiles;

(2) a clear definition of the objectives of the Strategic Defense Initiative;

(3) an explanation of the relationship between each such objective and each program and project associated with the Strategic Defense Initiative or defense against strategic ballistic missiles;

(4) the status of consultations with other member nations of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Japan, and other appropriate allies concerning research being conducted in the Strategic Defense Initiative program;

(5) a statement of any anticipated impact on the anti-ballistic missile treaty;

(6) consideration of a process by which Congress could review Soviet countermeasures to specific Strategic Defense Initiative programs and evaluate the adequacy of such programs to respond to such countermeasures;

(7) details on the funding of programs and projects for the Strategic Defense Initiative, including—

(A) prior and current year funding levels for all such programs, projects, and tasks in the Strategic Defense Initiative budgetary presentation materials;

(B) the amount requested to be appropriated for such programs, projects, and tasks for the fiscal year for which the budget is submitted; and

(C) the amount programmed to be requested for the following fiscal year.

REPORT ON THEATER NUCLEAR WEAPONS AND FORCE STRUCTURE

SEC. 1103. Not later than January 19, 1985, the President shall submit to Congress a report setting forth reasons why the United States should or should not initiate a long-term program for the renovation of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) nuclear deterrent in a manner designed to reduce pressures for early first use of tactical nuclear weapons and to substantially reduce the theater nuclear arsenal to types and numbers of weapons whose characteristics make for a more stable and credible force. The report (in addition to any other matter covered) should specifically address the following issues:

(1) Whether NATO should not eliminate its reliance on short-range battlefield nuclear weapons (such as the atomic demolition bomb and 155-millimeter and 8-inch nuclear artillery rounds), the exposure of which to early loss from enemy action promotes pressures for early use.

(2) Whether NATO should not refurbish its nuclear deterrent by designing and deploying specific dedicated nuclear launchers of a range which permits the coverage of all potential targets from locations in the rear of the European NATO territory in the territory of the Warsaw Pact short of the territory of the Soviet Union, thereby reducing pressure from enemy action for early first use of nuclear weapons.

(3) Whether NATO should not, as a consequence of a change in policy described in paragraph (2), eliminate its inventory of dual-capable nuclear/conventional weapons in order to allow early use of artillery, aircraft, and surface-to-surface missiles for conventional missions rather than causing them to be withheld for possible nuclear use.

(4) Whether NATO should not place control and operation of tactical nuclear weapons in a single specialized command established for that purpose so that all other NATO force elements could be free to concentrate on pursuing conventional military missions with maximum efficiency.

REPORT ON WITHDRAWAL OF TACTICAL NUCLEAR WARHEADS FROM EUROPE

SEC. 1104. The President shall submit a report to Congress not later than 90 days after the final decision is made (based upon the recommendations of the Supreme Allied Commander, Europe) regarding the net reduction to be made by the United States in the number of tactical nuclear warheads in the territory of North Atlantic Treaty Organization European member nations pursuant to the decision of the Nuclear Planning Group of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization of October 17, 1983. The report shall—

(1) specify the types of warheads to be withdrawn in accordance with that decision, the number of each such warhead to be withdrawn, the schedule for the withdrawal, and the rationale for the selection of the particular warheads to be withdrawn; and

(2) any changes in force structure to be made resulting from the changes in the tactical nuclear warheads positioned in Europe.

REPORT ON UNITED STATES COUNTERFORCE CAPABILITY

SEC. 1105. (a) Not later than April 15, 1985, the President shall submit to Congress a report discussing the required strategic counterforce capability consistent with existing United States policy.

(b) The report under subsection (a) shall be developed taking into consideration current and proposed United States intercontinental ballistic missiles having an accuracy on the order of the MX missile (including specifically the MX missile, the D-5 Trident missile, and the small single-warhead missile) intended to be procured for United States strategic force modernization and the rationale for the overall counterforce capability that would be attained as a cumulative result of those procurements. The President shall include in the report a specific definition of what United States counterforce capability would constitute a so-called "first-strike capability" against the Soviet Union.

(c) The report shall also include an assessment of corresponding Soviet counterforce and first-strike capabilities.

TRANSMITTAL TO CONGRESS OF REPORT ON SOVIET COMPLIANCE WITH ARMS CONTROL AGREEMENTS

SEC. 1106. (a) Not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President shall transmit to Congress the text of the report by the General Advisory Committee on Arms Control of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency entitled "A Quarter Century of Soviet Compliance Practices Under Arms Control Commitments: 1958-1983 (U)", dated November 1983. If the President determines that that report contains material the release of which to Congress would compromise United States intelligence sources, methods of intelligence gathering, or the national security of the United States, the President may furnish the text of such report after deleting or modifying such compromising material.

(b) Not later than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President shall transmit to Congress an unclassified version of the report described in subsection (a).

REPORT ON NUCLEAR WINTER FINDINGS AND POLICY IMPLICATIONS

SEC. 1107. (a) The Secretary of Defense shall participate in any comprehensive study of the atmospheric, climatic, environmental, and biological consequences of nuclear war and the implications that such consequences have for the nuclear weapons strategy and policy, the arms control policy, and the civil defense policy of the United States.

(b) Not later than March 1, 1985, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives an unclassified report suitable for release to the public, together with classified addenda (if required), concerning the subject described in subsection (a). The Secretary shall include in such report the following:

(1) A detailed review and assessment of the current scientific studies and findings on the atmospheric, climatic, environmental, and biological consequences of nuclear explosions and nuclear exchanges.

(2) A thorough evaluation of the implications that such studies and findings have on (A) the nuclear weapons policy of the United States, especially with regard to strategy, targeting, planning, command, control, procurement, and deployment, (B) the nuclear arms control policy of the United States, and (C) the civil defense policy of the United States.

(3) A discussion of the manner in which the results of such evaluation of policy implications will be incorporated into the nuclear weapons, arms control, and civil defense policies of the United States.

(4) An analysis of the extent to which current scientific findings on the consequences of nuclear explosions are being studied, disseminated, and used in the Soviet Union.

SENSE OF THE CONGRESS RELATING TO PEACEFUL NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE SOVIET UNION

SEC. 1108. (a) The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) An increasing number of scenarios (including misjudgment, miscalculation, misunderstanding, possession of nuclear arms by a terrorist group or a State sponsored threat) could precipitate a sudden increase in tensions and the risk of a nuclear confrontation between the United States and the Soviet Union, situations that neither side anticipates, intends, or desires.

(2) There has been a steady proliferation throughout the world of the knowledge, equipment, and materials necessary to fabricate nuclear weapons.

(3) Such proliferation of nuclear capabilities suggests an increasing potential for nuclear terrorism, the cumulative risk of which, considering potential terrorist groups and other threats over a period of years into the future, may be great.

(4) Current communications links represent equipment of the 1960's and as such are relatively outdated and limited in their capabilities.

(5) The President, responding to congressional initiatives, proposed the establishment of additional and improved communications links between the United States and the Soviet Union and other measures to reduce the risk of nuclear confrontation, and has initiated discussions at a working level with the Soviet Union pertaining to—

(A) the addition of a high speed facsimile capability to the direct communication link (hotline);

(B) the creation of a joint military communications link between the Department of Defense and the Soviet Defense Ministry; and

(C) the establishment by the Governments of the United States and Soviet Union of high-rate data communication links between each nation and its embassy in the other nation's capital.

(6) The establishment of nuclear risk reduction centers in Washington and Moscow could reduce the risk of increased tensions and nuclear confrontations, thereby enhancing the security of both the United States and the Soviet Union.

(7) These centers could serve a variety of functions, including—

(A) discussing procedures to be followed in the event of possible incidents involving the use of nuclear weapons by third parties;

(B) maintaining close contact during nuclear threats or incidents precipitated by third parties;

(C) exchanging information on a voluntary basis concerning events that might lead to the acquisition of nuclear weapons, materials, or equipment by subnational groups;

(D) exchanging information about United States-Union of Soviet Socialist Republics military activities which might be misunderstood by the other party during periods of mounting tensions; and

(E) establishing a dialog about nuclear doctrines, forces, and activities.

(8) The continuing and routine implementation of these various activities could be facilitated by the establishment within each Government of facilities, organizations, and bureaucratic relationships designated for these purposes, such as risk reduction centers, and by the appointment of individuals responsible to the respective head of state with responsibilities to manage such centers.

(b) The Congress—

(1) commends the President for his announced support for the confidence building measures described in subsection (a) and his initiation of negotiations which have occurred; and

(2) urges the President to pursue negotiations on these measures with the Government of the Soviet Union and to add to these negotiations the establishment of nuclear risk reduction centers in both nations to be operated under the direction of the appropriate diplomatic and defense authorities.

SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING A REPORT TO CONGRESS ON CERTAIN VERIFICATION PROGRAMS RELATING TO BIOLOGICAL AND CHEMICAL WEAPONS

SEC. 1109. (a) The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The Iran-Iraq war has recently demonstrated a marked increase in the proliferation of technology on the production of chemical weapons and an increase in the willingness of nations to use such weapons in armed conflict.

(2) The President's Report to Congress on Soviet Arms Control Noncompliance concluded that the Soviet Union has refused to respond adequately to United States concerns about the transfer or use by the Soviet Union of lethal chemical warfare agents in Laos, Kampuchea, and Afghanistan and United States concerns about adherence by the Soviet Union to the 1972 Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention.

(3) Experts at the recent annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science and at the First World Congress on New Compounds in Biological and Chemical Warfare held at Ghent, Belgium, emphasized that better verification of the use of chemical weapons and of the development of biological and toxin weapons was essential to strengthen the 1972 Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention and the Geneva Protocol of 1925.

(4) The 1972 Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention is scheduled for review in 1985.

(5) The United States is anxious to promote and strengthen adherence to the Geneva Protocol of 1925 and the 1972 Biological and Chemical Weapons Convention and is vigorously pursuing a comprehensive, verifiable, international agreement to ban chemical weapons.

(6) Any comprehensive agreement intended to ban the production, storage, and transfer of chemical weapons must provide for effective measures of verification and enforcement and in order for the 1972 Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention to be effective, compliance with the terms of the convention must be verifiable; and

(7) The Congress must be well informed regarding existing and planned programs for verifying compliance with the 1972 Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention and with a chemical weapons ban agreement.

(b) It is the sense of Congress that the President should submit to the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Select Committee on Intelligence of the Senate and to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives a comprehensive report identifying and evaluating—

(1) existing and planned programs to support verification requirements necessary to determine compliance with the 1972 Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention and a chemical weapons ban; and

(2) the budget resources necessary to support verification requirements necessary to determine compliance with the 1972 Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention and a chemical weapons ban.

(c) The President is requested to submit the report referred to in subsection (b) to the committees referred to in such subsection not later than March 15, 1985.

SENSE OF CONGRESS EXPRESSING SUPPORT FOR UNITED STATES TO PURSUE OUTSTANDING ARMS CONTROL COMPLIANCE

SEC. 1110. (a) The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) It is a vital security objective of the United States to limit the Soviet nuclear threat against the United States and its allies.

(2) The President has declared that "as for existing strategic arms agreements, we will refrain from actions which undercut them so long as the Soviet Union shows equal restraint".

(3) The United States has legitimate concerns about certain Soviet actions and behavior relevant to limitations and other provisions of existing strategic arms agreements.

(4) The President has declared that "the United States will continue to press compliance issues with the Soviet Union through diplomatic channels, and to insist upon explanations, clarifications, and corrective actions".

(5) The President has also declared that "the United States is continuing to carry out its obligations under relevant agreements".

(6) It would be detrimental to the security interests of the United States and its allies and to international peace and stability for the last remaining limitations on strategic offensive nuclear weapons to break down or lapse before replacement by a new strategic arms control agreement between the United States and the Soviet Union.

(7) The continuation of existing restraints on strategic offensive nuclear arms would provide an atmosphere more conducive to achieving an agreement significantly reducing the the levels of nuclear arms.

(8) The Soviet Union has not agreed to a date for resumption of the nuclear arms talks in Geneva, and it is incumbent on the Soviet Union to return to the negotiating table.

(9) A termination of existing restraints on strategic offensive nuclear weapons could make the resumption of negotiations more difficult.

(10) Both sides have, to date, abided by important numerical and other limits contained in existing strategic offensive arms agreements, including dismantling operational missile-firing submarines and remaining within the ceilings on multiple-warhead missile launchers and other related limits.

(11) It is in the interest of the United States and its allies for the Soviet Union to continue to dismantle older missile-firing submarines as new ones are deployed and to continue to remain at or below a level of 820 launchers of intercontinental ballistic missiles with multiple independently targeted reentry vehicles, 1,200 launchers of intercontinental ballistic missiles with multiple independently targeted reentry vehicles and submarine launched ballistic missiles, and 1,320 launchers of intercontinental ballistic missiles with multiple independently targeted reentry vehicles and submarine launched ballistic missiles and heavy bombers equipped with air launched cruise missiles, and other related limits in existing strategic offensive arms agreements.

(b) In view of these findings, it is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the United States should vigorously pursue with the Soviet Union the resolution of concerns over compliance with existing strategic and other arms control agreements and should seek corrective actions, where appropriate, through the Standing Consultative Commission and other available diplomatic channels;

(2) the United States should, through December 31, 1985, continue to pursue its stated policy to refrain from undercutting the provisions of existing strategic offensive arms agreements so long as the Soviet Union refrains from undercutting the provisions of those agreements, or until a new strategic offensive arms agreement is concluded;

(3) the President should provide a report to the Congress in both classified and unclassified forms reflecting additional findings regarding Soviet adherence to such a no-undercut policy, by February 15, 1985;

(4) the President shall provide to Congress on or before June 1, 1985, a report that—

(A) describes the implications of the United States Ship Alaska's sea trials, both with and without the concurrent dismantling of older launchers of missiles with multiple independently targeted reentry vehicles, for the current United States no-undercut policy on strategic arms and United States security interests more generally;

(B) assesses possible Soviet political, military, and negotiating responses to the termination of the United States no-undercut policy;

(C) reviews and assesses Soviet activities with respect to existing strategic offensive arms agreements; and

(D) makes recommendations regarding the future of United States interim restraint policy; and

(5) the President should carefully consider the impact of any change to this current policy regarding existing strategic offensive arms agreements on the long-term security interests of the United States and its allies and should consult with the Congress before making any change in current policy.

POLICY ON THE STATUS OF CERTAIN TREATIES TO PREVENT NUCLEAR TESTING

SEC. 1111. (a) The Senate makes the following findings:

(1) The United States is committed in the Limited Test Ban Treaty of 1963 and in the Non-Proliferation Treaty of 1968 to seek to achieve the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time.

(2) A comprehensive test ban treaty would promote the security of the United States by constraining the United States-Soviet nuclear arms competition and by strengthening efforts to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons.

(3) The Threshold Test Ban Treaty was signed in 1974 and the Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty was signed in 1976, and both have yet to be considered by the full Senate for its advice and consent to ratification.

(4) The entry into force of the Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty and the Threshold Test Ban Treaty will ensure full implementation of significant new verification procedures and so make completion of a comprehensive test ban treaty more probable.

(5) A comprehensive test ban treaty must be adequately verifiable, and significant progress has been made in methods for detection of underground nuclear explosions by seismological and other means.

(6) At present, negotiations are not being pursued by the United States and the Soviet Union toward completion of a comprehensive test ban treaty.

(7) The past five administrations have supported the achievement of a comprehensive test ban treaty.

(b) It is the sense of the Senate that at the earliest possible date, the President should—

(1) request advice and consent of the Senate to ratification (with a report containing any plans the President may have to negotiate supplemental verification procedures, or if the President believes it necessary, any understanding or reservation on the subject of verification which should be attached to the treaty) of the Threshold Test Ban and Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaties, signed in 1974 and 1976, respectively; and

(2) propose to the Soviet Union the immediate resumption of negotiations toward conclusion of a verifiable comprehensive test ban treaty.

(c) In accordance with international law, the United States shall have no obligation to comply with any bilateral arms control agreement with the Soviet Union that the Soviet Union is violating.

TITLE XII—PROCUREMENT POLICY REFORM AND OTHER PROCUREMENT MATTERS

PART A—SHORT TITLE AND CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 1201. This title may be cited as the "Defense Procurement Reform Act of 1984".

CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS AND POLICY

SEC. 1202. The Congress finds that recent disclosures of excessive payments by the Department of Defense for replenishment parts have undermined confidence by the public and Congress in the defense procurement system. The Secretary of Defense should make every effort to reform procurement practices relating to replenishment parts. Such efforts should, among other matters, be directed to the elimination of excessive pricing of replenishment spare parts and the recovery of unjustified payments. Specifically, the Secretary should—

(1) direct that officials in the Department of Defense refuse to enter into contracts unless the proposed prices are fair and reasonable;

(2) continue and accelerate ongoing efforts to improve defense contracting procedures in order to encourage effective competition and assure fair and reasonable prices;

(3) direct that replenishment parts be acquired in economic order quantities and on a multiyear basis whenever feasible, practicable, and cost effective;

(4) direct that standard or commercial parts be used whenever such use is technically acceptable and cost effective;

(5) vigorously continue reexamination of policies relating to acquisition, pricing, and management of replenishment parts and of technical data related to such parts; and

(6) ensure that persons that have developed products or processes offered or to be offered for sale to the public are not required, as a condition for the procurement of such products or processes by the Department of Defense, to provide to the United States technical data relating to the design, development, or manufacture of such products or processes (except for such data as may be necessary for the United States to operate and maintain the product or use the process if obtained by the United States as an element of performance under the contract).

PART B—AMENDMENTS TO CHAPTER 137 OF TITLE 10, UNITED STATES CODE

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 1211. Section 2302 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(4) 'Technical data' means recorded information (regardless of the form or method of the recording) of a scientific or technical nature (including computer software documentation) relating to supplies procured by an agency. Such term does not include computer software or financial, administrative, cost or pricing, or management data or other information incidental to contract administration.

"(5) 'Major system' means a combination of elements that will function together to produce the capabilities required to fulfill a mission need. The elements may include hardware, equipment, software or any combination thereof, but excludes construction or other improvements to real property. A system shall be considered a major system if (A) the Department of Defense is responsible for the system and the total expenditures for research, development, test and evaluation for the system are estimated to be more than $75,000,000 (based on fiscal year 1980 constant dollars) or the eventual total expenditure for procurement of more than $300,000,000 (based on fiscal year 1980 constant dollars); (B) a civilian agency is responsible for the system and total expenditures for the system are estimated to exceed $750,000 (based on fiscal year 1980 constant dollars) or the dollar threshold for a 'major system' established by the agency pursuant to Office of Management and Budget (OMB) Circular A-109, entitled 'Major Systems Acquisitions', whichever is greater; or (C) the system is designated a 'major system' by the head of the agency responsible for the system.".

"(2) a request for interested parties to submit comments on the proposal and shall include the name and address of the officer or employee of the Government designated to receive such comments.

"(d)(1) The requirements of subsections (a) and (b) may be waived by the officer of the agency authorized to issue a procurement policy, regulation, procedure, or form if circumstances make compliance with such requirements impracticable.

"(2) A procurement policy, regulation, procedure, or form with respect to which the requirements of subsection (c) are waived under paragraph (1) shall be effective on a temporary basis if—

"(A) a notice of such procurement policy, regulation, procedure, or form is published in the Federal Register and includes a statement that the procurement policy, regulation, procedure, or form is temporary; and

SEC. 1213. (a) Section 2305 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(c) The Secretary of Defense shall ensure that before a contract for the delivery of supplies to the Department of Defense is entered into—

"(1) when the appropriate officials of the Department are making an assessment of the most advantageous source for acquisition of the supplies (considering quality, price, delivery, and other factors), there is a review of the availability and cost of each item of supply—

"(A) through the supply system of the Department of Defense; and

"(B) under standard Government supply contracts, if the item is in a category of supplies defined under regulations of the Secretary of Defense as being potentially available under a standard Government supply contract; and

"(2) there is a review of both the procurement history of the item and a description of the item, including, when necessary for an adequate description of the item, a picture, drawing, diagram, or other graphic representation of the item.

"(d)(1)(A) The Secretary of Defense shall ensure that, in preparing a solicitation for the award of a development contract for a major system, the head of an agency consider requiring in the solicitation that an offeror include in its offer proposals described in subparagraph (B). In determining whether to require such proposals, the head of the agency shall give due consideration to the purposes for which the system is being procured and the technology necessary to meet the system's required capabilities. If such proposals are required, the head of the agency shall consider them in evaluating the offeror's price.

"(B) The proposals that the head of an agency is to consider requiring in a solicitation for the award of a development contract are the following:

"(i) Proposals to incorporate in the design of the major system items which are currently available within the supply system of the Federal agency responsible for the major system, available elsewhere in the national supply system, or commercially available from more than one source.

"(ii) With respect to items that are likely to be required in substantial quantities during the system's service life, proposals to incorporate in the design of the major system items which the United States will be able to acquire competitively in the future.

"(2)(A) The Secretary of Defense shall ensure that, in preparing a solicitation for the award of a production contract for a major system, the head of an agency consider requiring in the solicitation that an offeror include in its offer proposals described in subparagraph (B). In determining whether to require such proposals, the head of the agency shall give due consideration to the purposes for which the system is being procured and the technology necessary to meet the system's required capabilities. If such proposals are required, the head of the agency shall consider them in evaluating the offeror's price.

"(B) The proposals that the head of an agency is to consider requiring in a solicitation for the award of a production contract are proposals identifying opportunities to ensure that the United States will be able to obtain on a competitive basis items procured in connection with the system that are likely to be reprocured in substantial quantities during the service life of the system. Proposals submitted in response to such requirement may include the following:

"(i) Proposals to provide to the United States the right to use technical data to be provided under the contract for competitive reprocurement of the item, together with the cost to the United States, if any, of acquiring such technical data and the right to use such data.

"(ii) Proposals for the qualification of or development of multiple sources of supply for the item.

"(3) If the head of an agency is making a noncompetitive award of a development contract or a production contract for a major system, the factors specified in paragraphs (1) and (2) to be considered in evaluating an offer for a contract may be considered as objectives in negotiating the contract to be awarded.

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect at the end of the 180-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act.

DELEGATION OF CERTAIN PROCUREMENT FUNCTIONS

SEC. 1214. Section 2311 of title 10, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" before "Except as provided in"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(2) Any report required to be submitted by the head of an agency to Congress concerning contracts (or negotiations for contracts) above a certain dollar threshold that are sole-source contracts or that result from unsolicited proposals and that are entered into without the approval of certain officials of the procuring activity concerned need not specify a contract or negotiation above the stated amount if the head of the procuring activity, his deputy, or a person to whom authority was delegated under paragraph (1) approved the authority to enter into the contract.".

PERSONNEL EVALUATIONS TO INCLUDE EMPHASIS ON COMPETITION AND COST SAVINGS

SEC. 1215. Chapter 137 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§2317. Encouragement of competition and cost savings

"The Secretary of Defense shall establish procedures to ensure that personnel appraisal systems of the Department of Defense give appropriate recognition to efforts to increase competition and achieve cost savings in areas relating to contracts covered by this chapter.".

IMPROVED PROCUREMENT PROCEDURES

SEC. 1216. (a) Chapter 137 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding after section 2317 (as added by section 1215 of this Act) the following new sections:

"§2318. Advocates for competition

"(a) In addition to the competition advocates established or designated pursuant to section 20(a) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act, the Secretary of Defense shall designate an officer or employee of the Defense Logistics Agency to serve as the Advocate for Competition of the agency.

"(b) The advocate for competition established pursuant to subsection (a) shall carry out the responsibilities and functions provided for in sections 20(b) and 20(c) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act.

"(c) Each advocate for competition of an agency shall be a general or flag officer if a member of the armed forces or a grade GS-16 or above under the General Schedule (or in a comparable or higher position under another schedule), if a civilian employee and shall be designated to serve for a minimum of two years.

"(d) Each advocate for competition of an agency shall transmit to the Secretary of Defense a report describing his activities during the preceding year. The report of each advocate for competition shall be included in the annual report of the Secretary of Defense required by section 21 of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act, in the form in which it was submitted to the Secretary.

"§2319. Encouragement of new competitors

"(a) In this section, 'qualification requirement' means a requirement for testing or other quality assurance demonstration that must be completed by an offeror before award of a contract.

"(b) Except as provided in subsection (c), the head of the agency shall, before establishing a qualification requirement—

"(1) prepare a written justification stating the necessity for establishing the qualification requirement and specify why the qualification requirement must be demonstrated before contract award;

"(2) specify in writing and make available to a potential offeror upon request all requirements which a prospective offeror, or its product, must satisfy in order to become qualified, such requirements to be limited to those least restrictive to meet the purposes necessitating the establishment of the qualification requirement;

"(3) specify an estimate of the costs of testing and evaluation likely to be incurred by a potential offeror in order to become qualified;

"(4) ensure that a potential offeror is provided, upon request and on a reimbursable basis, a prompt opportunity to demonstrate its ability to meet the standards specified for qualification using qualified personnel and facilities of the agency concerned or of another agency obtained through interagency agreement, or under contract, or other methods approved by the agency (including use of approved testing and evaluation services not provided under contract to the agency);

"(5) if testing and evaluation services are provided under contract to the agency for the purposes of clause (4), provide to the extent possible that such services be provided by a contractor who will not be expected to benefit from an absence of additional qualified sources and who shall be required in such contract to adhere to any restriction on technical data asserted by the potential offeror seeking qualification; and

"(6) ensure that a potential offeror seeking qualification is promptly informed as to whether qualification is attained and, in the event qualification is not attained, is promptly furnished specific information why qualification was not attained.

"(c)(1) Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, the head of an agency may not establish a new qualification requirement, or enforce an existing qualified products list qualified manufacturers list, or qualified bidders list, with respect to a potential offeror or its product unless the requirements of subsection (b) have been complied with.

"(2) Except with respect to a qualified products list, qualified manufacturers list, or qualified bidders list, if it is unreasonable to specify the standards for qualification which a prospective offeror or its product must satisfy, a determination to that effect shall be submitted to the advocate for competition of the procuring activity responsible for the purchase of the item subject to the qualification requirement. After considering any comments of the advocate for competition reviewing such determination, the head of the purchasing office may waive the requirements of clauses (2) through (6) of subsection (b) for up to two years with respect to the item subject to the qualification requirement.

"(3) A potential offeror may not be denied the opportunity to submit and have considered an offer for a contract solely because the potential offeror is not on a qualified bidders list, qualified manufacturers list, or qualified products list if the potential offeror can demonstrate to the satisfaction of the contracting officer that the potential offeror or its product meets the standards established for qualification or can meet such standards before the date specified for award of the contract.

"(4) Nothing contained in this subsection requires the referral of an offer to the Small Business Administration pursuant to section 8(b)(7) of the Small Business Act if—

"(A) such referral would not have been required in the absence of this subsection; or

"(B) the offeror is challenging either the validity of the qualification requirement being used or the offeror's compliance with such requirement.

"(5) The head of an agency need not delay a proposed procurement in order to comply with subsection (b) or in order to provide a potential offeror with an opportunity to demonstrate its ability to meet the standards specified for qualification.

"(6) The requirements of subsection (b) also apply before enforcement of any qualified products list, qualified manufacturers list, or qualified bidders list.

"(d)(1) If the number of qualified sources or qualified products available to compete actively for an anticipated future requirement is fewer than two actual manufacturers or the products of two actual manufacturers, respectively, the head of the agency concerned shall—

"(A) periodically publish notice in the Commerce Business Daily soliciting additional sources or products to seek qualification unless the contracting officer determines that such publication would compromise national security; and

"(B) bear the cost of conducting the specified testing and evaluation (excluding the costs associated with producing the item or establishing the production, quality control, or other system to be tested and evaluated) for a small business concern or a product manufactured by a small business concern which has met the standards specified for qualification and which could reasonably be expected to compete for a contract for that requirement, but such costs may be borne only if the head of the agency determines that such additional qualified sources or products are likely to result in cost savings from increased competition for future requirements sufficient to amortize the costs incurred by the agency within a reasonable period of time considering the duration and dollar value of anticipated future requirements.

"(2) The head of an agency shall require a prospective contractor requesting the United States to bear testing and evaluation costs under paragraph (1)(B) to certify as to its status as a small business concern under section 3 of the Small Business Act.

"(e) Within seven years after the establishment of a qualification requirement under subsection (b) or within seven years following an agency's enforcement of a qualified products list, qualified manufacturers list or qualified bidders list, any such qualification requirement shall be examined and revalidated in accordance with the requirements of subsection (b). The preceding sentence does not apply in the case of a qualification requirement for which a waiver is in effect under subsection (c)(2).

"(f) Except in an emergency as determined by the head of the agency, whenever the head of the agency determines not to enforce a qualification requirement for a solicitation, the agency may not thereafter enforce that qualification requirement unless the agency complies with the requirements of subsection (b).

"§ 2320. Rights in technical data

"(a) The legitimate proprietary interest of the United States and of a contractor in technical or other data shall be defined in regulations prescribed as part of the single system of Government-wide procurement regulations as defined in section 4(4) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act. Such regulations may not impair any right of the United States or of any contractor with respect to patents or copyrights or any other right in technical data otherwise established by law. The following factors shall be considered in prescribing such regulations:

"(1) Whether the technical data was developed—

"(A) exclusively with Federal funds;

"(B) exclusively at private expense; or

"(C) in part with Federal funds and in part at private expense.

"(2) The statement of congressional policy and objectives in section 200 of title 35, the statement of purposes in section 2(b) of the Small Business Innovation Development Act of 1982 (Public Law 97-219; 15 U.S.C. 638 note), and the declaration of policy in section 2 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 631).

"(3) The interest of the United States in increasing competition and lowering costs by developing and locating alternative sources of supply and manufacture.

"(4) The policy set forth in section 1202(6) of the Defense Spare Parts Procurement Reform Act.

"(b) Regulations prescribed under paragraph (1) shall require that, whenever practicable, a contract for supplies or services entered into by an agency named in section 2303 of this title contain appropriate provisions relating to technical data, including provisions—

"(1) defining the respective rights of the United States and the contractor or subcontractor (at any tier) regarding any technical data to be delivered under the contract;

"(2) specifying the technical data, if any, to be delivered under the contract and delivery schedules for such delivery;

"(3) establishing or referencing procedures for determining the acceptability of technical data to be delivered under the contract;

"(4) establishing separate contract line items for the technical data, if any, to be delivered under the contract;

"(5) to the maximum practicable extent, identifying, in advance of delivery, technical data which is to be delivered with restrictions on the right of the United States to use such data;

"(6) requiring the contractor to revise any technical data delivered under the contract to reflect engineering design changes made during the performance of the contract and affecting the form, fit, and function of the items specified in the contract and to deliver such revised technical data to an agency within a time specified in the contract;

"(7) requiring the contractor to furnish written assurance at the time the technical data is delivered or is made available that the technical data is complete and accurate and satisfies the requirements of the contract concerning technical data;

"(8) establishing remedies to be available to the United States when technical data required to be delivered or made available under the contract is found to be incomplete or inadequate or to not satisfy the requirements of the contract concerning technical data; and

"(9) authorizing the head of the agency to withhold payments under the contract (or exercise such other remedies as the head of the agency considers appropriate) during any period if the contractor does not meet the requirements of the contract pertaining to the delivery of technical data.

"(c) Nothing in this section or in section 2305(d) of this title prohibits the Secretary of Defense from prescribing standards for determining whether a contract entered into by the Department of Defense shall provide for a time to be specified in the contract after which the United States shall have the right to use (or have used) for any purpose of the United States all technical data required to be delivered to the United States under the contract or providing for such a period of time (not to exceed 7 years) as a negotiation objective.

"(d) The Secretary of Defense shall by regulation establish programs which provide domestic business concerns an opportunity to purchase or borrow replenishment parts from the United States for the purpose of design replication or modification, to be used by such concerns in the submission of subsequent offers to sell the same or like parts to the United States. Nothing in this paragraph limits the authority of the head of an agency to impose restrictions on such a program related to national security considerations, inventory needs of the United States, the improbability of future purchases of the same or like parts, or any additional restriction otherwise required by law.

"§ 2321. Validation of proprietary data restrictions

"(a) A contract for supplies or services entered into by the Department of Defense which provides for the delivery of technical data, shall provide that—

"(1) a contractor or subcontractor at any tier shall be prepared to furnish to the contracting officer a written justification for any restriction asserted by the contractor or subcontractor on the right of the United States to use such technical data; and

"(2) the contracting officer may review the validity of any restriction asserted by the contractor or by a subcontractor under the contract on the right of the United States to use technical data furnished to the United States under the contract if the contracting officer determines that reasonable grounds exist to question the current validity of the asserted restriction and that the continued adherence to the asserted restriction by the United States would make it impracticable to procure the item competitively at a later time.

"(b) If after such review the contracting officer determines that a challenge to the asserted restriction is warranted, the contracting officer shall provide written notice to the contractor or subcontractor asserting the restriction. Such notice shall state—

"(1) the grounds for challenging the asserted restriction; and

"(2) the requirement for a response within 60 days justifying the current validity of the asserted restriction.

"(c) If a contractor or subcontractor asserting a restriction subject to this section submits to the contracting officer a written request, showing the need for additional time to comply with the requirement to justify the current validity of the asserted restriction, additional time to adequately permit the submission of such justification shall be provided by the contracting officer as appropriate. If a party asserting a restriction receives notices of challenges to restrictions on technical data from more than one contracting officer, and notifies each contracting officer of the existence of more than one challenge, the contracting officer initiating the first in time challenge, after consultation with the party asserting the restriction and the other contracting officers, shall formulate a schedule of responses to each of the challenges that will afford the party asserting the restriction with an equitable opportunity to respond to each such challenge.

"(d)(1) Upon a failure by the contractor or subcontractor to submit any response under subsection (b), the contracting officer shall issue a decision pertaining to the validity of the asserted restriction.

"(2) If after review of any justification submitted in response to the notice provided pursuant to subsection (b), the contracting officer determines that the justification for the restriction on the right of the United States to use technical data does not support adequately the asserted restriction on the technical data, a contracting officer shall within 60 days of receipt of any justification submitted, issue a decision or notify the party asserting the restriction of the time within which a decision will be issued.

ADDITIONAL MISCELLANEOUS PROCUREMENT PROVISIONS

SEC. 1234. (a) Chapter 141 of title 10, United States Code, as amended by section 1005, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"§ 2402. Prohibition of contractors limiting subcontractor sales directly to the United States

"(a) Each contract for the purchase of supplies or services made by the Department of Defense shall provide that the contractor will not—

"(1) enter into any agreement with a subcontractor under the contract that has the effect of unreasonably restricting sales by the subcontractor directly to the United States of any item or process (including computer software) made or furnished by the subcontractor under the contract (or any follow-on production contract); or

"(2) otherwise act to restrict unreasonably the ability of a subcontractor to make sales to the United States described in clause (1).

"(b) This section does not prohibit a contractor from asserting rights it otherwise has under law.

"§ 2403. Major weapon systems: contractor guarantees

"(a) In this section:

"(1) 'Weapon system' means items that can be used directly by the armed forces to carry out combat missions and that cost more than $100,000 or for which the eventual total procurement cost is more than $10,000,000. Such term does not include commercial items sold in substantial quantities to the general public.

"(2) 'Prime contractor' means a party that enters into an agreement directly with the United States to furnish part or all of a weapon system.

"(3) 'Design and manufacturing requirements' means structural and engineering plans and manufacturing particulars, including precise measurements, tolerances, materials, and finished product tests for the weapon system being produced.

"(4) 'Essential performance requirements', with respect to a weapon system, means the operating capabilities or maintenance and reliability characteristics of the system that are determined by the Secretary of Defense to be necessary for the system to fulfill the military requirement for which the system is designed.

"(5) 'Component' means any constituent element of a weapon system.

"(6) 'Mature full-scale production' means the manufacture of all units of a weapon system after the manufacture of the first one-tenth of the eventual total production or the initial production quantity of such system, whichever is less.

"(7) 'Initial production quantity' means the number of units of a weapon system contracted for in the first year of full-scale production.

"(8) 'Head of an agency' has the meaning given that term in section 2302 of this title.

"(b) Except as otherwise provided in this section, the head of an agency may not after January 1, 1985, enter into a contract for the production of a weapon system unless each prime contractor for the system provides the United States with written guarantees that—

"(1) the item provided under the contract will conform to the design and manufacturing requirements specifically delineated in the production contract (or in any amendment to that contract);

"(2) the item provided under the contract, at the time it is delivered to the United States, will be free from all defects in materials and workmanship;

"(3) the item provided under the contract will conform to the essential performance requirements of the item as specifically delineated in the production contract (or in any amendment to that contract); and

"(4) if the item provided under the contract fails to meet the guarantee specified in clause (1), (2), or (3), the contractor will at the election of the Secretary of Defense or as otherwise provided in the contract—

"(A) promptly take such corrective action as may be necessary to correct the failure at no additional cost to the United States; or

"(B) pay costs reasonably incurred by the United States in taking such corrective action.

"(c) The head of the agency concerned may not require guarantees under subsection (b) from a prime contractor for a weapon system, or for a component of a weapon system, that is furnished by the United States to the contractor.

"(d) Subject to subsection (e)(1), the Secretary of Defense may waive part or all of subsection (b) in the case of a weapon system, or component of a weapon system, if the Secretary determines—

"(1) that the waiver is necessary in the interest of national defense; or

"(2) that a guarantee under that subsection would not be cost-effective.

The Secretary may not delegate authority under this subsection to any person who holds a position below the level of Assistant Secretary of Defense or Assistant Secretary of a military department.

"(e)(1) Before making a waiver under subsection (d) with respect to a weapon system that is a major defense acquisition program for the purpose of section 139a of this title, the Secretary of Defense shall notify the Committees on Armed Services and on Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives in writing of his intention to waive any or all of the requirements of subsection (b) with respect to that system and shall include in the notice an explanation of the reasons for the waiver.

"(2) Not later than February 1 of each year, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to the committees specified in paragraph (1) a report identifying each waiver made under subsection (d) during the preceding calendar year for a weapon system that is not a major defense acquisition program for the purpose of section 139a of this title and shall include in the report an explanation of the reasons for the waivers.

"(f) The requirement for a guarantee under subsection (b)(3) applies only in the case of a contract for a weapon system that is in mature full-scale production. However, nothing in this section prohibits the head of the agency concerned from negotiating a guarantee similar to the guarantee described in that subsection for a weapon system not yet in mature full-scale production. When a contract for a weapon system not yet in mature full-scale production is not to include the full guarantee described in subsection (b)(3), the Secretary shall comply with the notice requirements of subsection (e).

"(g) Nothing in this section prohibits the head of the agency concerned from—

"(1) negotiating the specific details of a guarantee, including reasonable exclusions, limitations and time duration, so long as the negotiated guarantee is consistent with the general requirements of this section;

"(2) requiring that components of a weapon system furnished by the United States to a contractor be properly installed so as not to invalidate any warranty or guarantee provided by the manufacturer of such component to the United States;

"(3) reducing the price of any contract for a weapon system or other defense equipment to take account of any payment due from a contractor pursuant to subclause (B) of subsection (b)(4);

"(4) in the case of a dual source procurement, exempting from the requirements of subsection (b)(3) an amount of production by the second source contractor equivalent to the first one-tenth of the eventual total production by the second source contractor; and

"(5) using written guarantees to a greater extent than required by this section, including guarantees that exceed those in clauses (1), (2), and (3) of subsection (b) and guarantees that provide more comprehensive remedies than the remedies specified under clause (4) of that subsection.

"(h)(1) The Secretary of Defense shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out this section.

"(2) This section does not apply to the Coast Guard or to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

"§ 2404. Acquisition of petroleum: authority to waive contract procedures

"(a) The Secretary of Defense may, for any purchase of petroleum, waive the application of any provision of law prescribing procedures to be followed in the formation of contracts, prescribing terms and conditions to be included in contracts, or regulating the performance of contracts if the Secretary determines—

"(1) that petroleum market conditions have adversely affected (or will in the near future adversely affect) the acquisition of petroleum by the Department of Defense; and

"(2) the waiver will expedite or facilitate the acquisition of petroleum for Government needs.

"(b) A waiver under subsection (a) may be made with respect to a particular contract or with respect to classes of contracts. Such a waiver that is applicable to a contract for the purchase of petroleum may also be made applicable to a subcontract under that contract.

"(c) The Secretary of Defense may acquire petroleum by exchange of petroleum or petroleum derivatives.

"(d) The Secretary of Defense shall notify the Congress within 10 days of the date on which any waiver is made under this section and of the reasons for the necessity of exercising such waiver.

"(e) In this section, 'petroleum' means natural or synthetic crude, blends of natural or synthetic crude, and products refined or derived from natural or synthetic crude or from such blends.

"§ 2405. Limitation on adjustment of shipbuilding contracts

"(a) The Secretary of a military department may not adjust any price under a shipbuilding contract entered into after December 7, 1983, for an amount set forth in a claim, request for equitable adjustment, or demand for payment under the contract (or incurred due to the preparation, submission, or adjudication of any such claim, request, or demand) arising out of events occurring more than 18 months before the submission of the claim, request, or demand.

"(b) For the purposes of subsection (a), a claim, request, or demand shall be considered to have been submitted only when the contractor has provided the certification required by section 6(c)(1) of the Contract Disputes Act of 1978 (41 U.S.C. 605(c)(1)) and the supporting data for the claim, request, or demand.".

(b)(1) Effective on January 1, 1985, section 794 of the Department of Defense Appropriation Act, 1984 (Public Law 98-212; 97 Stat. 1454), is repealed.

(2) Effective on the date of the enactment of this Act, section 787 of the Department of Defense Appropriation Act, 1984 (Public Law 98-212; 97 Stat. 1453), is repealed.

PART E—OTHER MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS

SURVIVORS OF THE GLOMAR JAVA SEA

SEC. 1541. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) on October 26, 1983, the United States registered oil drilling ship Glomar Java Sea was reported missing during stormy weather at its drilling site 60 miles off Hainan Island in the South China Sea and was found sunken near its drilling site on November 1, 1983;

(2) no evidence has been found of 46 of the 81 crewmen, including citizens of the United States, or of the lifeboats which, reportedly, were launched from the Glomar Java Sea, despite an intensive cooperative search involving United States military search and rescue aircraft and commercial vessels;

(3) the Chairman of the United States Coast Guard Marine Board of Investigation has concluded that it is possible that crewmembers of the Glomar Java Sea survived and drifted into waters near the coast of Vietnam; and

(4) the Government of Vietnam has refused to allow an independent search for the possible survivors to be conducted in waters within 20 miles of such coast.

(b) Considering the findings set out in subsection (a), it is the sense of the Congress that the President should, through all appropriate bilateral and multilateral channels, continue and accelerate the effort to obtain the cooperation of the Government of Vietnam in ascertaining the fate or locations of the 46 crewmen of the sunken United States registered vessel Glomar Java Sea.

POLICY REGARDING THE FURNISHING OF FOOD AND MEDICAL SUPPLIES TO AFGHANISTAN

SEC. 1542. (a) The Congress finds—

(1) that after more than four years of occupation by the military forces of the Soviet Union, the freedom-loving people of Afghanistan continue bravely to resist the oppression of the Soviet Union;

(2) that the current Soviet Union offensive has resulted in great suffering and destruction in Afghanistan and has intensified the Soviet policy which targets civilian populations; and

(3) that this "scorched earth" policy of the Soviet Union, which has resulted in the destruction of crops, food supplies, farms, hospitals, and other public buildings in Afghanistan, has been a desperate attempt on the part of the Soviet Union to subdue the population of that country or to force the depopulation of certain areas which the occupying forces of the Soviet Union are unable to control.

(b) It is, therefore, the sense of Congress that the free world should take all appropriate steps to ensure that the people of Afghanistan have the necessary food and medical supplies adequate to sustain themselves while they are being ravaged by the invading forces of the Soviet Union.

REAFFIRMATION OF UNITED STATES POLICY TOWARD CUBA

SEC. 1543. (a) It is the policy of the Government of the United States to continue in its relations with the Government of Cuba the policy set forth in the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution expressing the determination of the United States with respect to the situation in Cuba", approved by the President on October 3, 1962 (Public Law 87-733; 76 Stat. 697).

(b) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to change or otherwise affect the standards and procedures provided in the National Security Act of 1947, the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, or the War Powers Resolution. This section does not constitute the statutory authorization for introduction of United States Armed Forces contemplated by the War Powers Resolution.

PART C—SPECIAL PROGRAM PROVISIONS

CONTRACTOR LIABILITY FOR INJURY OR LOSS OF PROPERTY ARISING OUT OF ATOMIC WEAPONS TESTING PROGRAMS

SEC. 1631. (a)(1) The remedy against the United States provided by sections 1346(b) and 2672 of title 28, United States Code, or by the Act of March 9, 1920 (46 U.S.C. 741-752 and 781-790), as appropriate, for injury, loss of property, personal injury, or death shall apply to any civil action for injury, loss of property, personal injury, or death due to exposure to radiation based on acts or omissions by a contractor in carrying out an atomic weapons testing program under a contract with the United States.

(2) The remedies referred to in paragraph (1) shall be exclusive of any other civil action or proceeding for the purpose of determining civil liability arising from any act or omission of the contractor without regard to when the act or omission occurred. The employees of a contractor referred to in paragraph (1) shall be considered to be employees of the Federal Government, as provided in section 2671 of title 28, United States Code, for the purposes of any such civil action or proceeding; and the civil action or proceeding shall proceed in the same manner as any action against the United States filed pursuant to section 1346(b) of such title and shall be subject to the limitations and exceptions applicable to those actions.

(b) A contractor against whom a civil action or proceeding described in subsection (a) is brought shall promptly deliver all processes served upon that contractor to the Attorney General of the United States. For purposes of removal, the certification by the Attorney General under this subsection establishes contractor status conclusively.

(c) The provisions of this section shall apply to any action now pending or hereafter commenced which is an action within the provisions of subsection (a) of this section. Notwithstanding section 2401(b) of title 28, United States Code, if a civil action or proceeding pending on the date of enactment of this section is dismissed because the plaintiff in such action or proceeding did not file an administrative claim as required by section 2672 of that title, the plaintiff in that action or proceeding shall have 30 days from the date of the dismissal or two years from the date upon which the claim accrued, whichever is later, to file an administrative claim, and any claim or subsequent civil action or proceeding shall thereafter be subject to the provisions of section 2401(b) of title 28, United States Code.

(d) For purposes of this section, the term "contractor" includes a contractor or cost reimbursement subcontractor of any tier participating in the conduct of the United States atomic weapons testing program for the Department of Energy (or its predecessor agencies, including the Manhattan Engineer District, the Atomic Energy Commission, and the Energy Research and Development Administration). The Task Group shall recommend any needed change in such procedures in accordance with subsection (e).

(b)(1) The Task Group shall consist of seven members, qualified for service by reasons of experience and education. The President shall appoint three members and shall designate one of those members to act as chairman of the Task Group. The Chairman and ranking minority members of the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives shall each appoint one member.

(2) It shall be the function of the group to review thoroughly the accomplishments, management, goals, and anticipated contributions of the defense inertial confinement fusion program.

(3) The President shall appoint to serve on the Technical Review Group only persons who, because of recent training and experience in the scientific disciplines associated with the development and testing of nuclear weapons, are most qualified to make findings of fact and recommendations to the Congress and the President concerning that program.

(b) The Technical Review Group shall submit to the President and the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives written reports containing the results of its review, together with such recommendations regarding priorities for future work in the inertial confinement fusion program as it determines appropriate, as follows:

(2) The total amount spent for the production of both such warheads after the date of the enactment of this Act may not exceed $1,100,000,000.

(3) No such warhead produced after the date of the enactment of this Act may be produced in the enhanced radiation version.

(4) In producing such warheads, special emphasis shall be placed upon improvements in the safety, security, range, and survivability of such warheads.

(5) Replacement of obsolete atomic-fired artillery projectiles now in Europe with such improved warheads shall be carried out within the nuclear stockpile limits agreed to by NATO Defense Ministers at Montebello, Canada, in October 1983, which required the withdrawal of 1,400 tactical nuclear warheads from the European stockpile in addition to the 1,000 warheads withdrawn in 1980.

(c) No action may be taken to implement this section until the Secretary of Defense submits a plan for the implementation of this section to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives.

TITLE XVII—UNITED STATES INSTITUTE OF PEACE

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 1701. This title may be cited as the "United States Institute of Peace Act".

DECLARATION OF FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

SEC. 1702. (a) The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) a living institution embodying the heritage, ideals, and concerns of the American people for peace would be a significant response to the deep public need for the Nation to develop fully a range of effective options, in addition to armed capacity, that can leash international violence and manage international conflict;

(2) people throughout the world are fearful of nuclear war, are divided by war and threats of war, are experiencing social and cultural hostilities from rapid international change and real and perceived conflicts over interests, and are diverted from peace by the lack of problem-solving skills for dealing with such conflicts;

(3) many potentially destructive conflicts among nations and peoples have been resolved constructively and with cost efficiency at the international, national, and community levels through proper use of such techniques as negotiation, conciliation, mediation, and arbitration;

(4) there is a national need to examine the disciplines in the social, behavioral, and physical sciences and the arts and humanities with regard to the history, nature, elements, and future of peace processes, and to bring together and develop new and tested techniques to promote peaceful economic, political, social, and cultural relations in the world;

(5) existing institutions providing programs in international affairs, diplomacy, conflict resolution, and peace studies are essential to further development of techniques to promote peaceful resolution of international conflict, and the peacemaking activities of people in such institutions, government, private enterprise, and voluntary associations can be strengthened by a national institution devoted to international peace research, education and training, and information services;

(6) there is a need for Federal leadership to expand and support the existing international peace and conflict resolution efforts of the Nation and to develop new comprehensive peace education and training programs, basic and applied research projects, and programs providing peace information;

(7) the Commission on Proposals for the National Academy of Peace and Conflict Resolution, created by the Education Amendments of 1978, recommended establishing an academy as a highly desirable investment to further the Nation's interest in promoting international peace;

(8) an institute strengthening and symbolizing the fruitful relation between the world of learning and the world of public affairs, would be the most efficient and immediate means for the Nation to enlarge its capacity to promote the peaceful resolution of international conflicts; and

(9) the establishment of such an institute is an appropriate investment by the people of this Nation to advance the history, science, art, and practice of international peace and the resolution of conflicts among nations without the use of violence.

(b) It is the purpose of this title to establish an independent, nonprofit, national institute to serve the people and the Government through the widest possible range of education and training, basic and applied research opportunities, and peace information services on the means to promote international peace and the resolution of conflicts among the nations and peoples of the world without recourse to violence.

In determining employee rates of compensation, the president shall be governed by the provisions of title 5, United States Code, relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates.

(d)(1) The president may request the assignment of any Federal officer or employee to the Institute by an appropriate department, agency, or congressional official or Member of Congress and may enter into an agreement for such assignment, if the affected officer or employee agrees to such assignment and such assignment causes no prejudice to the salary, benefits, status, or advancement within the department, agency, or congressional staff of such officer or employee.

(2) The Secretary of State, the Secretary of Defense, the Director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, and the Director of Central Intelligence each may assign officers and employees of his respective department or agency, on a rotating basis to be determined by the Board, to the Institute if the affected officer or employee agrees to such assignment and such assignment causes no prejudice to the salary, benefits, status, or advancement within the respective department or agency of such officer or employee.

(e) No officer or full-time employee of the Institute may receive any salary or other compensation for services from any source other than the Institute during the officer's or employee's period of employment by the Institute, except as authorized by the Board.

(f)(1) Officers and employees of the Institute shall not be considered officers and employees of the Federal Government except for purposes of the provisions of title 28, United States Code, which relate to Federal tort claims liability, and the provisions of title 5, United States Code, which relate to compensation and benefits, including the following provisions: chapter 51 (relating to classification); subchapters I and III of chapter 53 (relating to pay rates); subchapter I of chapter 81 (relating to compensation for work injuries); chapter 83 (relating to civil service retirement); chapter 87 (relating to life insurance); and chapter 89 (relating to health insurance). The Institute shall make contributions at the same rates applicable to agencies of the Federal Government under the provisions of title 5 referred to in this section.

(2) No Federal funds shall be used to pay for private fringe benefit programs. The Institute shall not make long-term commitments to employees that are inconsistent with rules and regulations applicable to Federal employees.

(g) No part of the financial resources, income, or assets of the Institute or of any legal entity created by the Institute shall inure to any agent, employee, officer, or director or be distributable to any such person during the life of the corporation or upon dissolution or final liquidation. Nothing in this section may be construed to prevent the payment of reasonable compensation for services or expenses to the directors, officers, employees, and agents of the Institute in amounts approved in accordance with the provisions of this title.

(h) The Institute shall not make loans to its directors, officers, employees, or agents, or to any legal entity created by the Institute. A director, officer, employee, or agent who votes for or assents to the making of a loan or who participates in the making of a loan shall be jointly and severally liable to the Institute for the amount of the loan until repayment thereof.

(b) No political test or political qualification may be used in selecting, appointing, promoting, or taking any other personnel action with respect to any officer, employee, agent, or recipient of Institute funds or services or in selecting or monitoring any grantee, contractor, person, or entity receiving financial assistance under this title.

Beginning two years after the date of enactment of this title, and at intervals of two years thereafter, the Chairman of the Board shall prepare and transmit to the Congress and the President a report detailing the progress the Institute has made in carrying out the purposes of this title during the preceding two-year period. The President shall prepare and transmit to the Congress within a reasonable time after the receipt of such report the written comments and recommendations of the appropriate agencies of the United States with respect to the contents of such report and their recommendations with respect to any legislation which may be required concerning the Institute. After receipt of such report by the Congress, the Committee on Foreign Affairs and the Committee on Education and Labor of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Labor and Human Resources of the Senate shall hold hearings to review the findings and recommendations of such report and the written comments received from the President.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5167) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1985 for the military functions of the Department of Defense, to prescribe military personnel levels for that fiscal year for the Department of Defense, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment to the text of the bill struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which is a substitute for the House bill and the Senate amendment. The differences between the House bill, the Senate amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

SUMMARY STATEMENT OF CONFERENCE ACTION

The conferees have agreed to authorizations for Department of Defense procurement, research, development, test, and evaluation, and operation and maintenance, and for civil defense that total $211.7 billion. This figure is $12.8 billion below the President's budget request, $1.8 billion below the recommendations in the Senate amendment and $4.6 billion above the comparable figures in the House bill.

The conferees have agreed to authorizations for Department of Energy National Security programs that total $7.4 billion, a figure consistent with fiscal year 1985 appropriations for those programs as contained in the Energy and Water Appropriations Act, 1985 (Public Law 98-360). This figure is $0.4 billion below the President's budget request, $0.1 billion below the comparable figure in a House reported authorization bill (H.R. 5395), and $28 million above the Senate amendment.

The Defense authorization bill provides authorizations for appropriations but does not provide budget authority. Budget authority for Department of Defense programs will be provided in appropriation bills.

The conference agreement would make a reduction of $13.2 billion in those portions of the national defense budget (function 050) authorized by dollar amounts in the bill. The conferees believe that this reduction is consistent with the agreement reached between the Speaker of the House and the Majority Leader of the Senate for a total defense authorization level of $297 billion in light of the additional reductions that have been or will be made in items under the jurisdiction of the Armed Services Committee, such as reductions in military construction and reductions in personnel matters which are not authorized by dollar amounts in the bill.

Relationship Between the Defense Authorization Act and the Intelligence Authorization Act With Respect to Activities in Nicaragua

The Intelligence Committees of the House and the Senate are responsible for legislation authorizing appropriations for the Central Intelligence Agency and the Intelligence Community. In each year since 1978, the Congress has enacted an Intelligence Authorization Act covering intelligence activities. This year, both the House and the Senate Intelligence Committees have reported Intelligence authorization bills. The House bill (H.R. 5399) deals with the Nicaragua issue in section 107. The Senate bill (S. 2713) addresses the issue in the classified annex to the committee report.

For bookkeeping and security reasons, gross amounts for intelligence activities necessarily must be factored into the Defense Authorization Act. However, the actual authorization for intelligence activities is contained in the Intelligence Authorization Act, not the Defense Authorization Act. The Intelligence Authorization Act, together with the accompanying report, including the classified annex, contains the recommendations, guidelines, directions and limitations with which the Intelligence Community must comply.

Thus, the Defense Authorization Act is simply neutral on the issue of the Nicaragua program. Amounts for intelligence activities have been factored into the Defense Authorization Act in such a fashion that the Nicaragua issue is not decided one way or the other. The issue can only be resolved in the Intelligence Authorization Act or in some other context.

Combustible cartridge

The House bill did not include authorization for the combustible cartridge case facility. The Senate amendment would authorize $5.0 million for the facility.

The conferees agree to authorize $5.0 million for the facility. However, the Department of the Army is directed to study the requirement for establishing a second source for the program and report its findings to the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives before obligating any funds for the program. In doing so, the Department of the Army should explore the feasibility of using off-shore procurement in order to strengthen the two-way street with our NATO allies.

Light anti-tank weapon

The budget request contained $33.8 million for the procurement of 29,000 Light Anti-tank Weapons (LAW). The House bill authorized $23.8 million for the program. The Senate amendment authorized $41.6 million. The House recedes.

This small increase in funding above the request for the Light Anti-tank Weapon (LAW) will nearly double the quantity that can be procured and accommodate the firm fixed price option achieved by the competition directed by the Congress in fiscal year 1982. Although the weapons now in competition, the AT-4 and the improved LAW, do not have the ability to defeat the frontal armor of a tank, they promise to be substantially more capable than the current LAW. Although development of a light-weight affordable weapon capable of defeating frontal armor may not be feasible, the capabilities of a light weapon of this type make it desirable for multi-purpose use.

RDX/HMX facilitization

The budget request contained $55.0 million to modernize and expand the manufacturing capabilities for explosives and propellents based on research department explosive (RDX) and the high melt explosive (HMX). In addition, the budget request contained $33.9 million to procure RDX/HMX for the war reserve stockpile. RDX/HMX is used in advanced munitions.

The House bill contained no authorization for the RDX/HMX program. The Senate amendment would authorize $110.0 million for the program.

The conferees agree to authorize $55.0 million for the RDX/HMX program in fiscal year 1985.

The conferees agree that the acquisition of facilities to produce RDX and HMX, which are military explosives used extensively in military munitions and as the basic ingredient for rocket propellants, is a matter that should be accorded extremely high priority. Holston Army Ammunition Plant, with facilities built in World War II, is the only plant in the free world that produces any significant quantity of RDX and HMX. The conferees believe that the Department's plans to stockpile RDX and HMX, although justified, must be deferred to permit the allocation of funds budgeted for stockpiling to be used instead to build new RDX and HMX facilities. Therefore, the conferees have denied all funds requested for RDX/HMX stockpiling and, instead, have reallocated those funds to the construction of new facilities in accordance with the following table:

[1] Authorized in the fiscal year 1985 Military Construction Act.

With regard to fiscal year 1984 and prior funds, $44 million of prior year funds, identified by the Defense Department as available to be applied against fiscal year 1985 requirements, have been included and are to be applied against RDX/HMX facility requirements as shown above. In addition, a pending reprogramming request in the amount of $48.5 million would permit the Army to begin RDX/HMX construction. The impact of the reprogramming request is also reflected in the table above. The conferees expect the Secretary of Defense to act quickly to have those funds obligated and to place these projects under contract.

The allocation of the $55 million requested for fiscal year 1985 and approved by the conferees is shown above. The $20 million requested for authorization for Holston in both the Army Ammunition Account and the Military Construction Account will be approved only in the Military Construction Account.

Funding allocation for the outyears is, of course, notional, but the conferees would expect the funding requested by the Defense Department to reflect the priority accorded to this effort by the Congress. There has also been some indication that private industry might be willing to invest its own capital to build these facilities in exchange for a long-term production contract. The Department is encouraged to pursue such an option provided that it does not delay the construction of facilities at any of the sites shown above, and the Defense Department should report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives no later than April 1, 1985, as to the progress on this option.

The budget request contained $105.5 million for five Trailblazer systems.

The House bill contained authorization of $63.8 million for two Trailblazer systems. The Senate amendment deleted all funds for the Trailblazer.

The Senate recedes.

Army—Other procurement, communications and electronics equipment tactical airborne RPV drone—Aquila

The budget request contained $144.5 million for the Aquila remotely piloted vehicle (RPV) system and $11.7 million for spares.

The House bill authorized $44.5 million for the RPV system and deleted all authorization for spares. The Senate amendment authorized $32.8 million for the RPV system and $11.7 million for spares.

The Senate recedes.

Fast Attack Vehicle (FAV)

The budget request contained $12.8 million to procure 402 fast attack vehicles. The House bill authorized the transfer of $5.4 million to Other Procurement, Army, for the Fast Attack Vehicle (FAV) program from funds appropriated for Other Procurement, Army, in fiscal year 1984. The Senate amendment did not provide authorization for the program.

The House recedes, and the conferees support the pending reprogramming request to obligate $5.4 million of fiscal year 1984 funds to procure additional FAV's for testing. Further, the committee directs that the Secretary of the Army to submit to the appropriate committees of the Congress a detailed report on Army-wide requirements, planned roles and missions for the Fast Attack Vehicle before any funds are obligated for the procurement of additional vehicles. The report should address these issues in the context of the recent decision to establish light divisions.

Prior year transfer

The House bill authorized the transfer of $18.0 million in prior year appropriations to be applied to the fiscal year 1985 Army Other Procurement program. The Senate amendment did not provide for similar authorization.

The conferees agree to authorize the transfer of $18.0 million in prior year appropriations to be applied to the fiscal year 1985 Army Other Procurement program.

The Senate recedes.

Military jacket linings

The military services are considering actions to change specifications from rayon (natural) fiber to polyester (synthetic) fiber for the linings of jackets (Army). The differences in "wearability" and comfort between rayon and polyester lining is marked, especially in the varied climate and stress situations of military service. The conferees are concerned that the specification change to polyester lining of military jackets may make a major difference in troop acceptability of those jackets.

Because this fiber is the only acceptable reinforcement for flexible brake and hydraulic lines, the conferees are also concerned that change may adversely impact domestic production and consequently adversely impact our domestic surge capacity for hydraulic hoses during mobilization.

The conferees, therefore, recommend that the services review the proposed specification change to ensure troop servicability including multi-climate testing and the strategic impact of rayon production linings upon mobilization surge capabilities. The results of this review should be provided to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives by February 1, 1985.

National Guard, Army

No authorization was requested for procurement of miscellaneous equipment for the Army National Guard. The House bill contained no authorization; the Senate amendment would authorize $50.0 million for this purpose.

The conferees recommend authorization of $50.0 million for procurement of equipment for the Army National Guard in fiscal year 1985.

The House recedes.

The House bill would authorize $1,415.0 million for the Trident submarine program, including $265.5 million for advance procurement for the thirteenth and fourteenth submarines and the transfer to the Trident program in fiscal year 1985 of $340 million originally authorized for the FFG-7 program in fiscal year 1983 and 1984.

The Senate amendment would authorize $1,748.2 million for the Trident submarine program, including $265.5 million for advance procurement.

The conferees agreed to authorize $1,708.2 million for the Trident submarine program, including $265.5 million for advance procurement, and the transfer to the Trident program in fiscal year 1985 of $40 million originally authorized for the FFG-7 program in fiscal year 1983.

Battleship reactivation (BB)

The budget request contained $422.6 million for reactivation of 1 battleship, the Missouri. After submission of the budget, the Department of Defense requested authority to reprogram $73.4 million of the fiscal year 1984 funds to accelerate reactivation of the Missouri. The reprogramming request was subsequently approved. According to Navy testimony an additional $336.2 million was required for reactivation of the Missouri.

The House bill authorized the transfer to the battleship program in fiscal year 1985 of $336.2 million originally authorized for the CVN aircraft carrier program in fiscal year 1983.

The Senate amendment authorized the transfer to the battleship program in fiscal year 1985 to $422.6 million originally authorized for Navy programs in fiscal year 1981 through 1984.

Conferees agreed to authorize the transfer of $336.2 million, originally authorized for the CVN aircraft carrier program in fiscal year 1983, to the battleship program in fiscal year 1984. The Senate amendment would authorize $1,173.4 million for procurement of 1 guided missile destroyer.

The Senate recedes.

Competition in the TAO-187 class fleet oiler program

The Senate addressed competition in the TAO-187 class fleet oiler program in the report accompanying the Senate bill and urged that the TAO-187 class fleet oilers be subject to a competitive award process throughout the life of the program, and that the Secretary seriously consider establishing a second source for this entire class of ships.

The conferees agreed that the contract award of TAO-187 class fleet oilers should be made on the basis of a competitive award process. The conferees noted that there are many shipyards capable of building the TAO-187 class oiler that would be expected to compete for the TAO construction contract.

Further, the conferees share the concern expressed by the Secretary of the Navy about the state of the nation's shipbuilding industrial base and noted that many yards capable of building TAO-187 class oilers are threatened by the projected lack of future shipbuilding construction contracts.

Ocean surveillance ship (TAGOS)

The budget request contained $192.9 million for procurement of 3 ocean surveillance ships.

The House bill would authorize $129.9 million for procurement of 2 ocean surveillance ships.

The Senate amendment reduced the authorization for contract support by $3.5 million.

The House bill contained no similar reduction.

The House recedes.

The President's budget request contained $5,953.9 million for Navy other procurement.

The House bill contained an authorization of $5,274.5 million.

The Senate amendment contained an authorization of $5,348.2 million.

The conferees agreed to an authorization of $5,266.3 million for other procurement.

Oceanographic support equipment

The report accompanying the Senate bill included language supporting the Navy's budget request for $10 million for oceanographic support equipment. This budget line item provides important funding for the Navy's total oceanography program. The House bill and committee report were silent on this matter.

The conferees agreed that the Navy oceanography program merits increased support, especially as knowledge of local environmental factors is becoming increasingly important to the effective employment of various sensors and weapons at sea. The conferees urge that the Navy not reduce the oceanographic support equipment program.

Sealift support equipment

The budget request contained $24.1 million for sealift support systems, including $18.5 million for 160 SEASHED systems to provide containerships with the capability to transport heavy or outsize cargo. The conferees support the concept of utilizing SEASHEDS to allow the use of modern containerships to carry military cargoes and Navy's decision to contract for these components with two small business firms through a small business set aside program.

MX advanced intercontinental ballistic missile system

The budget request contained $3,171.9 million for 40 MX missiles, including $233.0 million for spare parts. The House bill authorized $1,813.9 million for the procurement of 15 operational MX missiles. Further, the House bill stipulated that the obligation of funds for the procurement of the 15 missiles could not occur unless a joint resolution of approval was adopted by the Congress. The Senate amendment authorized $2,621.9 million for 21 MX missiles, including $233.0 million for spare parts.

The conferees, pursuant to the agreement reached by the Administration and the congressional leadership of the Senate and House of Representatives, agree to authorize $2,500 million for 21 operational missiles, including $148.0 million for missile spare parts. Of the total amount authorized, $1,000 million may be obligated at any time in fiscal year 1985, for the basing and support of the 21 missiles procured in fiscal year 1984, for the procurement of long lead components associated with the fiscal year 1985 operational missiles, and for missile spare parts.

The remaining $1,500.0 million in fiscal year 1985 authorization for the procurement of the 21 operational missiles would not become effective until a joint resolution of approval is enacted by the Congress. The consideration of the resolution would occur under expedited procedures before the Easter district work period of the first session of the 99th Congress. A similar requirement would apply to the release of appropriations contained in the fiscal year 1985 Defense Appropriations Act for the MX. A vote would occur on the second joint resolution of approval not more than one calendar day after the vote on the first resolution.

In addition, the conferees agree to the provision in the Senate amendment (Sec. 1008) that requires the President to provide to the Congress a report, after March 1, 1985, assessing the requirement for and the anticipated impact of the procurement of such missiles. The assessment would take into account the impact of such procurement on the stability of the strategic balance, the arms control process, and the status of the development of more survivable basing modes for the MX and other such missiles, including a new small mobile intercontinental ballistic missile.

The conferees intend that the report should provide the Congress with detailed information regarding options to enhance the basing mode survivability of deployed Minuteman II and III missiles, the soon to be deployed Peacekeeper (MX) missile, as well as information about the basing options under consideration for the small ICBM. This should include an assessment of the merits of hardening existing silos, constructing new superhardened silos, multiple aim point configurations and closely spaced array basing options. Such an assessment should address the availability, possible siting, and potential cost issues for each basing option, as well as any enviromental and arms control considerations.

In addition, in order that the Congress have access to all the relevant information that bears on the U.S. ICBM modernization program, the conferees request the Administration to provide a report to the Congress by December 1, 1984, in both classified and unclassified forms, reflecting any additional findings regarding Soviet compliance with their arms control commitments. The conferees are concerned by the implications of the noncompliance issues contained in the Administration's January 1984 report to the Congress, and therefore require that any additional findings in this regard be provided to the Congress prior to its vote in connection with the release of the fiscal year 1985 MX procurement funds.

AIM-7F/M Sparrow

No authorization was requested for Sparrow missiles. The House bill contained no authorization for Sparrow missiles. The Senate amendment would authorize $130.0 million for procurement of 600 Sparrow missiles.

The conferees agree to authorize $130.0 million for procurement of 600 Sparrow missiles.

The House recedes.

AGM-65D Maverick

The budget request contained $565.2 million for procurement of 4500 Maverick missiles and no authorization for advance procurement. The House bill would authorize $370.2 million for procurement of 2600 Maverick missiles and no authorization for advance procurement. The Senate amendment would authorize $359.6 million for procurement of 2600 Maverick missiles and $15.0 million for advance procurement.

The conferees agree to authorize $359.6 million for procurement of 2600 Maverick missiles and $15.0 million for advance procurement.

The House recedes.

AGM-88A HARM

The budget request contained $326.3 million for procurement of 871 HARM missiles. The House bill would authorize $287.8 million for procurement of 746 HARM missiles. The Senate amendment would authorize $326.3 million for procurement of 871 HARM missiles.

The conferees agree to authorize $326.3 million for procurement of 871 HARM missiles.

The House recedes.

AMRAAM

The budget request contained $348.1 million for the procurement of 174 Advanced Medium Range Air-to-Air Missiles (AMRAAM), $64.9 million for advance procurement, and $18.0 million for initial spares.

The House bill authorized $231 million for 75 missiles, $31.9 million for advance procurement and $11.1 million for initial spares. The Senate amendment authorized $102.5 million for 50 missiles, $35 million for advance procurement and deleted all funds for initial spares.

The conferees agreed to recommend authorization of $115.0 million for the procurement of 50 AMRAAM missiles, $35.0 for advance procurement and recommends deletion of funding for initial spares.

Development problems have contributed to an eight-month program delay, and poor cost estimating of missile and test equipment fabrication have reduced the credibility of previous cost estimates.

As a result, the conferees believe that the key to future cost control of the AMRAAM resides in the ability of the Air Force to develop a second source for missile production. The Air Force is, therefore, directed to fund the second source production effort at a rate that will ensure the earliest practical qualification of the second source consistent with this objective.

The conferees emphasize that the future of the AMRAAM program depends upon the abilities of the Department of Defense and the manufacturers to adequately control system cost.

Spares and repair parts

The budget request contained $639.8 million for missile spares and repair parts, including $20.1 million for the AMRAAM missile, $11.9 million for the HARM missile, $233.0 million for the MX missile, and $374.8 million for all other items. The House bill would authorize $624.4 million for missile spares and repair parts, including $11.1 million for the AMRAAM missile, $9.9 million for the HARM missile, and $594.6 million for all other items. The House bill would provide no authorization for MX missile spares. The Senate amendment would authorize $615.3 million for missile spares and repair parts, including $11.9 million for the HARM missile, $233 million for the MX missile, and $370.4 million for all other items. The Senate amendment contained no authorization for AMRAAM spares and repair parts.

The conferees agree to authorize $530.3 million, including $148.0 million for the MX missile, and $11.9 million for HARM. No authorization was included for AMRAAM.

Air Force other missile support

The budget request contained $3,992.6 million for procurement of Air Force other missile support. The House bill would authorize $3,711.7 million. The Senate amendment would authorize $3,932.1 million.

The conferees recommend authorization of $3,826.9 million for Air Force other missile support, including the following specific authorizations:

Space launch support

$189.0 million, including $80.1 million for advance procurement

Defense satellite communications system (DSCS)

The budget request contained $291.2 million to procure two defense satellite communications systems (DSCS) in fiscal year 1985, including $90.2 million for advance procurement to support a multiyear contract for the remaining satellites for the DSCS system. The House bill would authorize $215.1 million to procure two satellites in fiscal year 1985 but would provide no authorization for advance procurement. The Senate amendment would authorize the amounts requested.

The conferees recommend an authorization of $251.2 million to procure two satellites in fiscal year 1985 and $52.4 million for advance procurement to support a multiyear contract for the remaining DSCS satellites.

The House recedes with an amendment.

Special programs

The conferees recommend an authorization of $2,620.4 million. Reductions in this program will be noted in the classified annex to this report.

The House recedes with an amendment.

NATO cooperative air defense programs

The budget request contained no authorization for the NATO cooperative air defense program. The House bill authorized $350.0 million for the program. The Senate amendment did not provide authorization for the program. The conferees agreed to authorize $250.0 million for the program.

The $250.0 million program authorization would be under the control of the Under Secretary of Defense for Research and Engineering and allocated in the following manner:

$150 million—NATO Patriot (to implement the United States-Federal Republic of Germany (FRG) air base defense agreement).

$65 million—Point air defense FRG (to begin procurement of 30 Rolands for point air defense of 5 undefended U.S. air bases in Germany).

$15 million—to begin procurement of point air defense of undefended U.S. air bases in Italy.

$10 million—to begin procurement of point air defense for undefended Ground Launched Cruise Missile (GLCM) sites in the United Kingdom and Italy.

$10 million—to complete procurement of Rapier missiles for U.S. air bases in Turkey that will begin with obligation of $50 million appropriated in fiscal year 1983.

In addition, the conferees recommend for inclusion in the conference agreement the necessary legislative authority in fiscal year 1985 for the Secretary of Defense to fully implement the December 6, 1983, United States cooperative air base defense agreement with the Federal Republic of Germany.

With the cooperation of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, the enabling legislation provides for the necessary waivers of administrative and other charges that would be required to complete the transfer of defense articles under the Arms Export Control Act.

In the future, the conferees expect the Department of Defense to comply with the request contained in the following letter from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, September 21, 1984.

Hon. MELVIN PRICE,
Chairman, Committee on Armed Services, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: It is my understanding that the Secretary of Defense is seeking authority to implement the recently concluded air defense agreement between the United States and the Federal Republic of Germany. Even though this authority is not contained in either the House or the Senate version of the Defense Department authorization legislation, the Department is seeking to include this authority in the conference report.

The proposed authority involves the transfer of defense articles and services to the FRG and the waiving of administrative and other charges required for arms transfers under the Arms Export Control Act, and therefore directly involves the jurisdiction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The authority being sought would be for fiscal year 1985 only. I therefore have no objection to its inclusion in the conference report, with the clear understanding that authority to continue this agreement beyond fiscal year 1985 would be sought by the Department through the annual foreign assistance authorization request. It is my understanding that the Defense Department will comply with this condition.

I appreciate the opportunity to work with your Committee on this matter and would ask that the text of this letter be included in the joint statement of managers accompanying the conference report.

With best wishes, I am

Sincerely yours,

DANTE B. FASCELL, Chairman.

Need to strengthen U.S. communications and information systems security

The communications security (COMSEC) posture and practices of the U.S. government, recently identified to Congress, are poor. The security of the nation's automated information systems present a similar problem.

The conferees have consistently supported the development of COMSEC technology and the modernization of equipment in an effort to keep pace with communications advances and national security needs, and considerable progress has been made in these areas. Nevertheless, it is apparent that the process of securing essential U.S. communications is progressing too slowly. The advantages we hold in advanced technology, strategic policy and planning, nuclear weapons development and deployment, and numerous other vital areas are in danger. This is of great concern to the conferees. The reasons cited for the existing COMSEC problems are complex and involve the basic issues of organizational structure, authority and resources.

Accordingly, the conferees request the Secretary of Defense provide to the Committees on Armed Services and the Select Committees on Intelligence of the Senate and the House of Representatives by March 1, 1985, a report on the status of the measures being implemented to remedy the deficiencies in COMSEC planning and execution and an assessment of the additional funds and personnel which would be required to support a national COMSEC effort. This report should address the implications for the privacy of nongovernment communications as well as the impact of major proposals on the full range of governmental functions.

The Armed Services Committees, in concert with the Intelligence Committees, intend to examine in greater detail the subject of U.S. communications security in connection with congressional review of the fiscal year 1986 budget request.

The House recedes with an amendment.

Air National Guard equipment

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 103(a)) that would provide for authorization for Air National Guard equipment as a separate account and $20.0 million would be authorized to procure 30 millimeter gun pods for the Air National Guard provided the Director of the Air National Guard determines such procurement to be of high priority.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that eliminates the provision that would authorize the procurement of the 30 millimeter gun pods for the Air National Guard.

Aircraft replacement for Air National Guard (ANG) units currently equipped with OA-37 Aircraft

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 126(d)) that would express the sense of Congress that the Air Force should provide modern replacement aircraft for those ANG units using OA-37 aircraft and that the United States should not sell or provide ANG DA-37 aircraft to any foreign country unless that unit's aircraft is replaced by an OA-37 or that unit is in the process of converting to a more modern aircraft.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Limitation on waivers of cost recovery requirements under the Arms Export Control Act (sec. 107)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 107) that would provide that the President's authority under sec. 21(e)(2) of the Arms Export Control Act may be exercised without regard to limitation imposed by section 762A of the Department of Defense Appropriation Act, 1984. The provision would remove the restriction in section 762A of the 1984 Department of Defense Appropriation Act requiring that non-recurring costs for research, development, and production of major defense equipment be recovered from foreign military sales. The removal of this restriction would allow the President to waive these non-recurring and other charges in accordance with section 21(e)(2) of the Arms Export Control Act.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Waiver of limitation on foreign military sales program (sec. 108)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 108) that would permit the Arms Export Control Act to be administered as if section 743(a) of the fiscal year 1984 Defense Appropriations Act had not been enacted into law.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Section 743(a) of the Defense Appropriations Act provides that receipts from foreign military sales (FMS) of defense articles from Department of Defense inventory not intended to be replaced will be deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Chapter 5 of the Arms Export Control Act (AECA) authorized the establishment of a Special Defense Acquisition Fund (SDAF) for the purpose of procuring defense items in anticipation of foreign requirements. One of the sources of funds for the SDAF authorized by section 51 of the AECA was receipts from FMS of defense articles from Department of Defense inventory not intended to be replaced. The Committees on Armed Services place considerable importance in the SDAF, and for fiscal year 1982 authorized a level of $900 million.

The practical effect of section 743(a) is to eliminate one source of funds for the SDAF. However, the SDAF is near its currently authorized ceiling of $900 million and, therefore, is not in need of the additional funds at this time. Although the normal procedure is to have such funds deposited in the SDAF, given that the SDAF is already approaching the authorized ceiling, the conferees made an exception and authorized the funds to be used to finance new procurement authorized for the Army and Air Force in sections 101 and 103 of this bill. The conferees expect the Department of Defense in fiscal year 1986 to request an increase in the SDAF ceiling. At that time, if receipts from FMS of defense articles from Department of Defense inventory not intended to be replaced are needed to capitalize the SDAF they will be used for that purpose, consistent with the intent of Congress when it established the SDAF.

Transfer of certain military equipment or data to foreign countries (sec. 109)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 109) that would repeal section 765(c) of the Department of Defense Appropriation Act, 1984. Section 765(c) prohibits the use of funds for the sale of AN/SQR-19 towed array sonar to any foreign country.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Policy concerning acquisition of additional MX missiles (sec. 110)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1008) that would restate the requirement for the President to submit a report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives, coincident with a budget submission for the procurement of additional MX missiles, an assessment of the need for and impact of such MX missile procurement on strategic stability, the arms control process and the development status of other types of intercontinental ballistic missiles (ICBM), including a new small mobile ICBM.

The House bill contained two provisions (secs. 110 and 1132) that would preclude funds for MX unless the Congress approved such funds by joint resolution after April 1, 1985.

The conferees agreed to a substitute described under the discussion of the MX missile earlier in this title.

Prohibition of spending funds for binary chemical munitions (sec. 111)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 111) that would specifically prohibit the use of any of the funds appropriated pursuant to authorization for the procurement of binary chemical munitions.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provisions.

The Senate recedes.

Sole source procurement for the B-1B strategic weapons loader (sec. 112)

The Senate amendment encouraged the competition for a new Munition's Lift Trailer (MLT) and contained a provision (sec. 103(b)) prohibiting the expenditure of any funds for sole source procurement of a new trailer or for the modification of an existing trailer to meet the performance requirements for strategic bombers.

The House bill contained no similar provision. The House recedes with an amendment. The House report (H. Rept. 98-691) accompanying H.R. 5167 prohibited the use of any funds authorized by this Act for the development of a new Munition's Lift Trailer.

The conferees understand that competitive proposals for a new MLT are being evaluated and that the Air Force has also implemented a value engineering change proposal for the existing MHU-173. The conferees further understand that the winning design for the new MLT is to be evaluated against the modified MHU-173 design to determine which MLT design will best accommodate the long-term needs of the strategic bomber force in the most cost and performance effective manner. The conferees agree that this evaluation should continue without delay so that further purchase of new MLT's can be accomplished on the basis of competitive procurements. The results of this evaluation, and the rationale for the selected approach, will be reported to the Senate and House Armed Services Committees prior to the initiation of MLT procurements.

The House recedes with an amendment.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

AH-64 helicopters for Army National Guard

The House bill contained authorization for 144 AH-64 attack helicopters. Section 101(b) of the House bill provides that not fewer than 18 of the 144 AH-64 helicopters be provided to the Army National Guard. The remaining 126 AH-64 helicopters are to be procured to meet active Army requirements. Although the Senate bill contained authorization for 144 AH-64 attack helicopters, it did not require that AH-64 helicopters be provided to the Army National Guard.

The conferees agreed to delete section 101 (b) of the House bill. The conferees further agreed that 18 AH-64 helicopters be provided to the Army National Guard if funds are appropriated to procure a total of 144 AH-64 helicopters. If, however, sufficient appropriations are not provided to procure 144 AH-64 helicopters, the Army National Guard is to be provided only those helicopters procured in excess of the 126 helicopters for active Army components.

M1 tank engine second sourcing

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 101(d)) that would repeal section 107 of the 1984 Defense Department Authorization Act (Public Law 98-94). Section 107 prohibits the Secretary of the Army from entering into a contract to develop a second source for the engine for the M1 tank.

The House bill contained no similar amendment.

The Senate recedes.

Strategic sealift ready reserve force (RRF)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 102(g)) that would provide that none of the funds appropriated pursuant to the authorization of appropriations for the strategic sealift ready reserve program may be obligated or expended for the acquisition of a specific vessel until the Secretary of the Navy has notified the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives of the proposed acquisition and a period of 30 days of continuous session of Congress has passed.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

Because the Navy was not able to describe the ships it plans to acquire during hearings, the conferees agreed that notification of proposed acquisitions should be provided to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives prior to obligation or expenditure of funds, and direct that the Secretary provide such notice.

The House recedes.

TITLE II—RESEARCH, DEVELOPMENT, TEST AND EVALUATION

GENERAL

The Administration requested a total authorization of $33,993,687,000 for fiscal year 1985 Research, Development, Test and Evaluation (RDT&E) appropriations. The conferees agreed on a total authorization of $32,080,263,000 for the RDT&E program, a reduction of $1,913,424,000 from the Administration's request. The following tables summarize the conference actions.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

A–6E upgrade

The Administration requested $19.6 million for modernization of the Navy A–6E attack aircraft. The House bill provided no funding for the A–6E modernization but authorized $15 million for the evaluation of a modified F–14 aircraft for the Navy attack mission. The Senate authorized $69.6 million, an additional $50 million above the request for A–6E modernization.

The conferees agreed on an authorization of $69.6 million for A–6E modernization. In providing this authorization, the conferees further agreed that no funds shall be obligated or expended until the Secretary of the Navy has submitted to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives a report containing the information requested in the respective authorization committees' reports. Furthermore, to avoid unnecessary delays in the development schedule, the conferees recommend the Navy utilize partially assembled production aircraft as prototypes for the modernization program.

Advanced antitank weapon system

The Army requested authorization of $24.901 million for the Advanced Anti-Tank Weapon System.

The House bill reduced the authorization of $19.0 million; the Senate amendment provided authorization for the full request.

The conferees agreed to the Senate position to provide full authorization with the understanding that $5 million be used only for the investigation and evaluation (to include test firings) of foreign systems currently in production, to include the French developed DARD 120 millimeter close range anti-tank weapon.

Advanced communications system

The House bill reduced the Air Force request for $86.963 million for the Advanced Communications system to $52.5 million; the Senate amendment provided the full amount requested.

The conferees agreed to an authorization of $76 million for the Advanced Communications System projects.

The conferees agreed that no funds shall be obligated or expended for aircraft integration of the Enhanced JTIDS System (EJS) until the Secretary of Defense has submitted to the House and Senate Committees on Armed Services a report assessing the projected threat to Army, Navy and Air Force tactical aviation units and assuring the committees that the approach planned by the Department of Defense to achieve secure anti-jam voice communications is cost effective.

This report shall be submitted as early as possible but no later than March 1, 1985.

Antitactical missile

The House bill reduced the Army's request for $92.335 million for the Joint Anti-Tactical Missile (ATM) program to $15 million. The Senate amendment reduced this program to $32.335 million. The conferees agreed that the Department of Defense has failed to define and fully justify this program as required by the conference report on the Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 1984.

The conferees agreed to an authorization of $32.335 million to be used only to carry out the near-term ATM program consistent with the guidance provided in the Senate report on S. 2723 (S. Rept. 98–500). The long-term ATM requirement is to be carried out in accordance with the guidance provided in the House report on H.R. 5167 (H. Rept. 98–691).

Army light division

The Army requested $101.313 million for its Advanced Development and Employment Agency (ADEA) and its High Technology Light Division (HTLD) programs.

The House bill provided full authorization for these two programs; the Senate amendment denied authorization for both programs.

The Army has indicated its intention to establish a new light division within existing end strength. The conferees endorse this decision. However, consistent with the discussion in the Senate report on S. 2723, (S. Rept. 98-500) the conferees have some concerns with respect to this decision and believe that the Army should proceed with deliberate caution before deciding to establish more of these divisions and before finally deciding how to man and equip such a division. In addition, the Army should carefully examine the impact that this decision would have on the necessary support forces. The conferees endorse the requirement in the Senate report for a report on this issue.

In consonance with this approach, the conferees agree that the Advanced Development and Employment Agency (ADEA), created to expedite the establishment of a new High Technology Light Division (HTLD), should be disestablished, because the Army has decided to organize the 9th Infantry Division as a one-of-a-kind motorized division. The conferees concur in the Senate guidance to involve division, brigade and battalion commanders in the process of developing new ideas and new equipment concepts, and authorization for appropriations included in the Senate bill for "Force Development Initiatives" has been included at a level somewhat reduced from that proposed in the Senate bill. The programs formerly included under the program elements for ADEA (PE 63324A) and HTLD (PE 64323A) are disposed of in accordance with the following table.

ADEA/HTLD DISPOSITION OF R&D PROJECTS

[In thousands of dollars]

	Requested	Conference allowance	Transferred to PE number
ADEA (PE 63324A)
ADEA Distributed Command Post	12,663	8,000	63723A (Tactical C [3]).

Indirect Sight System (New Start, TOW)	5,411	3,000	23724A (TOW).
Subtotal	58,796	14,414

The conferees expect that funding authorization under "Force Development Initiatives" for the motorized division will be used to bring on-going projects under the ADEA and HTLD programs to a prudent conclusion.

Automated test equipment

The conferees agreed to provide authorization for the Army request of $4.767 million for the Army Test Measurement and Diagnostic Equipment program and $15.859 million for its Automated Test Equipment program. The conferees expressed concern, however, that the Army remains undecided on maintenance doctrine as it applies to the generation of weapon systems now being fielded. The conferees believe that after two years of Army effort the Automated Test Equipment program remains ill-defined.

The conferees direct that before any of the funds authorized for these two programs are obligated the Secretary of the Army shall submit a report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives providing details on:

Army doctrine for the maintenance of the equipment now being fielded.

The plan for addressing research and development requirements for testing equipment.

The conferees believe that standardization of maintenance equipment is feasible and that, by establishing common specifications for hardware and by accommodating differences through software, the standardization can be accomplished. Consequently, a major research and development program to develop universal test equipment does not appear to be justified.

C-5A aircraft demonstration

The Air Force did not request authorization to establish the full range of capability of the C-5A aircraft from unimproved or short airfields. The House bill provided $2.0 million for this purpose within the amounts authorized for the C-17 airlift program; the Senate amendment contained $2.0 million for this purpose in a separate line item.

The conferees believe that it is essential for the Air Force to realize the full operational potential of the C-5 aircraft especially in light of the substantial shortfall in airlift capabilities. The conferees require, therefore, that the Secretary of Defense complete a demonstration program to clearly establish the operational capabilities of the C-5 aircraft. Although aircraft backing and heavy weight operations appear to be the most promising aspects of such a demonstration program, the Secretary of Defense should ensure that the capabilities of the C-5A aircraft to operate routinely and safely from austere airfields are clarified during this demonstration program.

The conferees agreed to an authorization of $2.0 million for this purpose in a separate line item and to bill language specifying that these funds may be used only for this demonstration program.

Carrier variant antisubmarine warfare helicopter

The House bill would provide authorization of $20 million, a reduction of $24.516 million from the Navy request for the Carrier Variant Anti-Submarine Warfare Helicopter. The Senate amendment would provide $25.016 million.

The conferees agreed to authorization recommended by the Senate amendment with the understanding that this authorization is only for the development of a derivative of the Navy SH-60B helicopter for the carrier variant anti-submarine warfare mission.

The conferees agreed that the Navy should modify a current production SH-60B helicopter to the CV helicopter configuration for use during full-scale engineering development. This action would reduce both development time and costs.

The conferees adopted the legislative provision provided by the House bill that would require that these funds be used only for the SH-60B derivative program.

Defense research sciences

The House bill would provide an authorization level of $310.0 million, a reduction of $14.048 million from the $324.048 million requested by the Navy for its Defense Research Sciences program. The Senate amendment recommended an authorization of $324.048 million.

The conferees agreed to provide the full authorization requested by the Navy with the understanding that the amount restored—$14.483 million—would be used by the Office of Naval Research to strengthen the university research instrumentation and equipment programs, to establish a Navy Young Investigators Research program, to enhance the Graduate Fellowship Program, and to help revitalize the university mathematics program, all in support of present and future Naval interests.

Department of Defense high energy laser systems test facility (HELSTF)

The Army requested $39.399 million for Department of Defense High Energy Laser Systems Test Facility (HELSTF).

The House bill would provide authorization for $19.399 million; the Senate amendment provided the full authorization request.

The conferees agreed to an authorization of $33.0 million with the provision that full funding as planned by the Army for fiscal year 1985 be used for the multi-purpose chemical laser project.

Dragon warhead upgrade

The Army requested no authorization to enhance the performance of the Dragon anti-tank missile.

The House bill provided no authorization for this purpose; the Senate amendment provided authorization of $9.8 million.

The conferees agreed to the Senate position with the understanding that unless the Army takes action to proceed with this warhead upgrade program by April 1, 1985, the $9.8 million would be transferred to the Marine Corps for the same purpose.

Electronic warfare technology

The House bill made reductions in several Navy and Air Force electronic warfare programs. The Senate approved the majority of the Administration's request for electronic warfare programs. Additionally, the House bill recommended an increase in authorization of $16 million for electronic warfare exploratory and advanced development projects to focus attention on the electronic warfare requirements associated with advanced technology platforms. This is discussed further in the classified annex to this report.

Reductions in the Advanced Self-Protection Jamming system (ASPJ), Tactical Protective Systems, Protective Systems, and other programs recommended by the House of Representatives relate to the lack of a Department of Defense coordinated plan for electronic warfare development and production programs. There is concern that U.S. electronic warfare capabilities have not kept pace with advances in Soviet and Warsaw Pact sensor systems.

The conferees agreed that better coordination is required among all four services in identifying electronic warfare requirements and the programs required to address them. The conferees agreed that greater commonality could be achieved to reduce costs and improve capability. Current receiver processors, for example, used in jamming systems, may also function as radar warning receivers. At this time, however, numerous unrelated efforts are underway to develop discrete warning and receiver processor components with little apparent attention being paid to achieving commonality.

Accordingly, the conferees request the Secretary of Defense require the services to develop a comprehensive, coordinated electronic warfare plan that addresses the threat, requirements, potential preplanned product improvement programs, operational integration of U.S. electronic warfare systems, the prospects for commonality and joint systems, and other relevant factors. This plan should be submitted to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives as soon as possible but not later than June 15, 1985.

F-4g wild weasel squadrons

The House bill would reduce the Air Force request for $55.267 million to $30.0 million; the Senate amendment provided authorization for the full request.

The conferees agreed to an authorization of $55.267 million with the understanding that $8 million of this authorization be used to evaluate a new engine for F-4 aircraft. The conferees emphasize that this does not constitute a commitment to an F-4 re-engining program for the U.S. inventory of F-4s.

Global positioning system (GPS)

Because of the numerous implementation problems associated with the recovery of a portion of Global Positioning System costs from non-DOD users, the conferees agree that the user fee requirement established in the fiscal year 1982 Department of Defense Authorization and Appropriations Act be rescinded. In view of the expected widespread civil use of GPS, however, the conferees direct the Department of Defense to conduct a study to determine whether the Department of Defense should retain management responsibility for the Global Positioning System, or whether it should be transferred to another federal agency. The results of this study should be submitted to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives not later than the submission date of the fiscal year 1986 budget request.

ICBM modernization

The conferees commend the Air Force for progress made over the last year on the small ICBM program. The conferees note the substantial effort made in carrying out the recommendations of the Small Missile Advisory Group on a management approach and acquisition strategy for the small missile. In particular, the conferees endorse the resulting program structure that takes maximum advantage of competition to reduce cost, enhance innovation and maintain schedule control. In this regard, the conferees urge the Air Force to maintain options for guidance systems.

While continuing to ensure the acquisition strategy of maintaining options, the Air Force is encouraged to take steps to expedite evaluation of environmental impacts so that the earliest possible initial operational capability (IOC) can be achieved. In this regard, the conferees direct that a legislative environmental impact statement on the development of the small ICBM system be prepared, submitted to the appropriate committees of Congress, and considered by the Department of Defense prior to any decisions being made on full scale development or basing area selections. The legislative environmental impact statement shall address the peacetime environmental impacts of alternate basing modes and deployment area. In addition, site specific administrative environmental impact statements shall be prepared covering the deployment and peacetime operation of the small ICBM prior to decisions being made on deploying the system at particular locations within the chosen areas.

Joint service rotary engine development

The administration did not request authorization of funds in fiscal year 1985 for research and development of the rotary engine.

Section 203(a)(6) of the House bill specifies that $5.0 million of the amount authorized for the Navy would be available only for the development of the rotary engine for Army and Marine Corps applications.

The Senate amendment would authorize $6.0 million for research and development of Joint Service Rotary Engine Development with the Navy directing this program as a joint service effort.

The conferees agreed to authorize $6.0 million for research and development of Joint Service Rotary Engine Development and to specify in bill language that these funds could be used only for the development of the rotary engine for Army, Navy, and Marine Corps applications.

Joint surveillance target attack radar system (JSTARS)

The Administration requested $108.168 million for the Army and $94.9 million for the Air Force for the development of the Joint Surveillance Target Attack Radar System (JSTARS). The House authorize $108.168 million for the Army and no funds for the Air Force for JSTARS development. The Senate authorized $102.168 million for the Army and $94.966 million for the Air Force.

Subsequent to the submission of the fiscal year 1985 Defense Authorization request, the Army and Air Force agreed that rather than developing a different aircraft for each service, a single Air Force aircraft could meet the needs of both. The conferees endorse this cooperative approach.

Combining Army and Air Force requirements into a single program reduces the fiscal year 1985 required funding by $48 million. The conferees, therefore, recommend an authorization of $60.1 million for the Army and $94.966 million for the Air Force for research and development of JSTARS. Of the funds authorized for the Army, $20 million shall be made available to the Air Force only for development of the JSTARS radar.

Joint tactical fusion

The House bill reduced the Army request for the Joint Tactical Fusion program by $46.3 million and directed that the program be restructured to reduce costly program management overhead and be reoriented to a less expensive lighter weight and more easily transported system being examined for the Army light divisions.

The Senate amendment authorized the full request.

The conferees agreed to a reduction of $23.0 million with the stipulation that the program be restructured and reoriented as directed by the House report on H.R. 5167 (H. Rept. 98-691).

Lighter than air technology

No authorization was requested by the Department of Defense for the fiscal year 1985 Lighter Than Air Technology program.

The House bill would provide an authorization of $3 million for the Air Force for the purpose of developing a high altitude surveillance vehicle system. The Senate amendment would provide $5 million for the Navy for this purpose. The conferees agreed with the Senate provision to provide $5 million in authorization to the Navy to explore the potential contribution of ligher-than-air technology for surveillance and targeting in support of naval missions.

Low-cost seeker (LCS)

The House bill provided authorization for $25 million for research and development of a low-cost seeker (LCS) for the High Speed Anti-Radiation Missile (HARM). The House bill contained a provision (sec. 203.(a)) restricting the use of this authorization for the LCS.

The House bill provided no authorization for the Navy's HARM Improvement program or for the Air Force Defense Suppression Weapons Engineering Development program; the Senate amendment provided the full authorization request of $19.569 million and $4.795 million respectively, for these two programs.

The conferees provided authorization of $46.422 million. This authorization consists of $14.686 million from the HARM Improvement program; $4.0 million from the Defense Suppression Weapons Engineering program; $14.736 million from the $25 million authorized by the House bill and $13.0 million from fiscal year 1984 Navy carry over appropriations. Sections 203(a)(5) and 204(3) requires that this authorization be used only for this purpose.

M-1 tank track

In the House report accompanying H.R. 5167 (H. Rept. 98-691), the Army was requested to test a track of West German design on the U.S. M-1 tank. The House conferees have been advised that the West German track provides longer life with simplified maintenance at a lower operating costs than the current M-1 tank track. A tank track of the same or similar design is used by every NATO nation except the United States.

The conferees concurred with the House position that early test and analysis of the applicability of the German track to the M-1 tank is essential. The conferees require, therefore, that the Secretary of the Army conduct such a comprehensive operational test and report the results to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives by June 1, 1985.

Manufacturing technology

The Senate Armed Services Committee report included language expressing support for the Manufacturing Technology program and encouraged the Navy to continue to support improved ship manufacturing techniques and advanced composites manufacturing.

The conferees also express support for this program and urge the Navy not to reduce funding for Manufacturing Technology below the level authorized and appropriated.

Materials technology

The Senate report (S. Rept. 98-500) accompanying S. 2723 expressed support for the exploratory development of new materials, including metal matrix and carbon-carbon composites.

The conferees agreed that these advanced materials have promising near-term potential to reduce weight and cost and to enhance the survivablity of ships and aircraft. Accordingly, the conferees intend that the authorization provided to the Navy for Materials Technology not be used for any other purpose.

Navy strategic communications

The House bill would reduce the Navy request for $106.535 million to $29.430 million. The Senate amendment would provide authorization of $116.535 million. The House bill would provide no authorization for the development of a derivative of the Boeing 707 commercial airliner referred to as the E-6A, which is intended as a replacement for the current fleet of C-130 Take Charge and Move Out (TACAMO) communications aircraft. The Senate amendment provided authorization for the E-6A aircraft as well as additional authorization of $10 million to accelerate very low frequency communication improvements.

The conferees agreed to an authorization of $99.43 for Navy Strategic Communications. The conferees recognize the increased communications requirements on the TACAMO fleet resulting from the greater operating range of the Trident ballistic missile submarine, and therefore recommend an authorization of $60.0 million for research and development of either the E-6A or an upgraded C-130 aircraft. However, the conferees direct that these funds not be expended until the Secretary of Defense forward a report to the Armed Services Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives that: (1) certifies the Department's commitment to aircraft procurement in the Five Year Defense Plan; and (2) provides an update on the TACAMO Alternatives Study submitted in response to language in the Fiscal Year 1982 Department of Defense Authorization bill. This update should address the most recent information on connectivity (including completing of the Defense Nuclear Agency's study), endurance, survivability and basing, and supportability. In addition, it should address future growth options and requirements, taking into account possible future communications developments, that bear on the choice of an aircraft on into the next decade.

The conferees recommend authorization of $24.7 million, an increase of $10.0 million over the amount requested, to accelerate the very low frequency (VLF) upgrade of the TACAMO mission. This upgrade will greatly enhance the ability to TACAMO aircraft, either the C-130 or the E-6A, to downlink the Emergency Action Message to Trident SSBNs deployed in the Pacific.

New design submarine (SSN-21)

The Navy requested $687.4 million for research and development associated with the development of a new class attack submarine referred to as the SSN-21 (formerly the SSN-X).

Although both the House bill and the Senate amendment made several reductions in authorization for associated new design submarine projects, both committees support the Navy's requirement to develop a follow-on submarine system to the current SSN-688 class.

The House bill also provided additional authorization of $30.0 million for Advanced Submarine Technology and a provision restricting the obligation and expenditure of any funds unless and until the Secretary of the Navy certifies to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives and the new attack submarine would be capable of engaging the known Soviet submarine threat under operational conditions. The basis for the threat assessment leading to this certification would be the current national intelligence estimate as approved by the Director of Central Intelligence.

The conferees agreed with the intent of the House provision as modified to allow the obligation and expenditure of not more than $100 million until submission of the certification to the Committees on Armed Services. In the event such certification is not possible, the Navy is to submit a plan to develop a submarine system that would be capable of engaging the threat together with a request to reprogram whatever funds are required to accomplish this objective.

The conferees emphasize that of any amount appropriated for the Navy's research and development program, the authorization requires that $30 million must be used for the Advanced Technology project.

P-3 modernization

The Navy requested $37.4 million for the modernization of P-3 aircraft.

The House bill provided the full request; the Senate amendment reduced the request to $22.388 million.

The conferees agreed to provide $30.0 million for P-3 modernization with the understanding the Navy will proceed with the development and, if successful, the implementation of the Inverse Synthetic Aperture Radar (ISAR). The conferees are concerned over the development costs of the ISAR and request that the Navy evaluate the cost estimate and report the justification with its submission of the fiscal year 1986 budget request.

Protective systems

The Administration requested $48.5 million for research and development of improved electronic countermeasures for F/FB-111 and B-52 aircraft, for the development of electro-optical equipment for these aircraft and for computer threat simulation for evaluation of electronic warfare equipment. The House authorized $69.5 million, $20.9 million more than requested; the Senate authorized $45.5 million, a reduction of $3 million from the request. The House recommendation included the deletion of the F/FB-111 Protective Systems project.

The conferees agreed to an authorization of $58.565 million for the development of Protective Systems with the understanding that no funds be available for the ALQ-137 development unless and until the Air Force fully evaluates this system relative to the Advanced Self Protective Jammer (ASPJ) System and other alternatives and reports the findings to the Committees on Armed Services of the House of Representatives and Senate. An additional $11.4 million for the exploration of recent technological breakthroughs identified in the classified annex is also provided.

Space boosters

The conferees recommend full funding of $20.36 million in research and development and $25.31 million for procurement for the space booster program, and support the Department of Defense plan to purchase 10 expendable launch vehicles (ELV's) to complement the Shuttle. Although the conferees find that the Shuttle has demonstrated its effectiveness as a space launch system, the conferees do not believe that total reliance on that system for the deployment of crucial military payloads is in the national security interest. The conferees note, however, that the Department of Defense will continue to rely on the Shuttle for the great majority of its space launches.

Stores ejector technology

The House bill would provide $1 million of the funds authorized for the Air Force only for the development of Stores Ejector Technology other than hydraulic technology.

The conferees adopted the House position.

Strategic defense initiative

The Department of Defense requested $1.777 billion for the Strategic Defense Initiative. The House bill would provide authorization of $1.37 billion; the Senate amendment would provide authorization of $1.62 billion.

The House recedes.

Tactical mobility study

Both the report accompanying the House bill and the report accompanying the Senate amendment request the Secretary of Defense to conduct a comprehensive tactical mobility study.

The conferees believe that a period of at least one year should be devoted to this study because of the complexity and difficulty of the effort. The conferees agreed that the final report should be submitted to the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives not later than February 1, 1986.

Trident II

The conferees strongly endorse the Trident II missile, which by virtue of its survivable basing, range, throw-weight and accuracy, will constitute an important element of our deterrence posture into the next century. To hedge against Soviet ABM capabilities, including the potential for a Soviet breakout of the ABM Treaty, the conferees recommend that $17 million be authorized for sea-launched ballistic missile (SLBM) penetration research, and direct that such research be undertaken on a priority basis.

Very high-speed integrated circuits (VHSIC)

The Air Force requested $119.978 million for the Very High-Speed Integrated Circuits (VHSIC) program.

The House bill would provide authorization of $150.0 million; the Senate amendment would authorize the amount requested.

The conferees agreed that the VHSIC program is essential for improved weapons system reliability and capability. The House conferees noted that because of budget constraints, the Department of Defense intended to defer the initiation of Phase II of the VHSIC program which is intended to explore the possibility of developing and producing submicron (less than one millionth of a meter) integrated circuit technology.

The conferees in recognition of the importance of VHSIC, agreed to the House recommendation. Further, the conferees agreed that of the $150 million authorized for appropriation, $3 million is available for research and development in laser pantography aimed at single day prime scale prototype of submicron size wafer scale integrated circuits for defense applications that require compact ultra high performance ditital data processing systems.

Additionally, the conferees request the Secretary of Defense to develop a plan to be submitted to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives for a program to ensure that VHSIC technology is made available to weapon system developers as VHSIC components become available and mature.

Special legislative provisions in research, development, test and evaluation

The conferees adopted the following legislation provisions that appeared in either the House bill or the Senate amendment.

Provisions relating to Army programs (sec. 202).—The conferees adopted the following provisions contained in section 116 of the Senate amendment:

The provision allowing the Secretary of the Army to proceed with competitive development of a Joint Tactical Missile System and to complete the full scale engineering development of the system by July 1, 1987.

The provisions contained in section 116(g) (1) and (2) of the Senate amendment requiring authorization of $1.3 million for the purchase of new methanol cars for laboratory and fleet tests. The provision also requires the Secretary of the Army to submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives a written report on the progress of the methanol fuel program not later than September 30, 1985.

Limitation on funds for the Navy (sec. 203).—The conferees adopted the following provisions contained in section 203 of the House bill:

The provision authorizing $45 million only for the Rankine/Cycle Energy Recovery (RACER) System to ensure compatibility of the RACER system with all ships of the DDG-51 class, including the lead ship.

The provision authorizing $25.016 million only for the development of a derivative of the Navy SH-60 helicopter for the aircraft carrier inner-zone anti-submarine warfare helicopter mission.

The provision authorizing $37.795 million only for the Mark 92 Gunfire Control System.

The provision authorizing $30 million only for the Advanced Submarine Technology initiatives to enhance the effectiveness of the Navy new design attack submarine designated SSN-X and subsequent submarines.

The provision authorizing $42.422 million only for continued development of the low cost anti-radiation guidance and control system for the High-Speed Anti-Radiation Missile (HARM) and other delivery vehicles.

The provision authorizing $6 million only for the development of the rotary engine for Army, Navy, and Marine Corps applications.

The provision authorizing $26.603 million only for the development of the Vertical Launch Anti-Submarine Rocket system.

The provision authorizing $2.5 million only for the development of the Submarine Laser Communication System.

The conferees adopted a modified provision of section 203(b) of the House bill. The provision states that of the amount authorized for appropriation in section 203 not more than $100 million may be obligated or expended for research and development of the new design submarine and its associated programs and projects, unless and until the Secretary of the Navy provides to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives written certification that, based on current national intelligence estimates approved by the Director of Central Intelligence, the new design attack submarine will be capable under operational conditions of engaging the known Soviet submarine threat.

Limitations on funds for the Air Force (sec. 204).—The conferees adopted the following provisions contained in section 204 of the House bill:

The provision authorizing $129.285 million only for development of the C-17 cargo transport aircraft.

The provision authorizing $2 million only to complete test and evaluation of the C-5 cargo transport aircraft.

The provision authorizing $4 million only for continued development of the low cost anti-radiation guidance and control system for the High-Speed Anti-radiation Missile (HARM) and other delivery vehicles.

Limitation on funds for anti-satellite weapons (sec. 205).—The Air Force requested $143.7 million for anti-satellite weapons.

The House bill reduced the authorization to $120 million; the Senate amendment provided authorization for the full request.

The conferees agreed that none of the funds appropriated pursuant to an authorization contained in this or any other Act may be obligated or expended to test against an object in space the minature homing vehicle (MHV) anti-satellite warhead launched from an F-15 aircraft unless the President determines and certifies to Congress—

(1) that the United States is endeavoring, in good faith, to negotiate with the Soviet Union a mutual and verifiable agreement with the strictest posssible limitations on anti-satellite weapons consistent with the national security interests of the United States;

(2) that, pending agreement on such strict limitations, testing against objects in space of the F-15 launched miniature homing vehicle anti-satellite warhead by the United States is necessary to avert clear and irrevocable harm to the national security;

(3) that such testing would not constitute an irreversible step that would gravely impair prospects for negotiations on anti-satellite weapons; and

(4) that such testing if fully consistent with the rights and obligations of the United States under the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty of 1972 as those rights and obligations exist at the time of such testing.

The prohibition on the expenditure of funds provided for in this section shall be removed only when the certifications referred to above have been received by the Congress and 15 calendar days have expired following the date on which such certifications and reports have been received.

The conferees also agreed that, during fiscal year 1985, funds appropriated for the purpose of testing the F-15 launched miniature homing vehicle anti-satellite warhead may not be used to conduct more than two successful tests against an object in space. A "successful test" is one where the ASAT miniature homing vehicle is launched, its booster and seeker work according to specifications, and it intercepts the object. The conferees used the word "successful" to prevent the testing program from being penalized should the booster and/or seeker fail. At the same time, the conferees do not want to create options for near misses of the target. In the event of any test being ruled other than successful, the Secretary of Defense must report immediately to Congress explaining precisely why the test was so ruled.

The conferees agreed to the full request of $143.7 million.

Limitation on funds for the Defense Agencies (see. 206).—The conferees adopted the following provisions contained in section 205 of the House bill:

The provision authorizing $35 million only for the Strategic Laser Communication Technology program.

The provision authorizing $10 million only for the application of free electron laser technology for medical research and material science applications.

The conferees adopted the provision contained in section 116(a) of the Senate amendment authorizing $59 million for the activities of the Director of Test and Evaluation subject to section 1303.

Implementation of law to establish independent Director of Operational Test and Evaluation (sec. 207).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1129) that would prohibit the obligation or expenditure of funds appropriated for the activities of the Director of Operational Test and Evaluation until certain conditions were met.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would provide that not more than $20 million of the funds appropriated for the activities of the Director of Test and Evaluation of the Department of Defense, including Foreign Weapons Evaluation, may be obligated or expended until the President has nominated an individual to be Director of Operational Test and Evaluation of the Department of Defense, the Senate has given its advice and consent to the nomination of such individual, and the Secretary of Defense has established within the Department the organizational structure for the Office of the Director of Operational Test and Evaluation, as provided for under section 136a of title 10, United States Code.

TITLE III—OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Stock fund fuel refund

The House bill reduced the Department of Defense operation and maintenance request by $303.1 million due to lower than expected fuel costs in fiscal year 1984. This represents a transfer forward of greater than expected profits in the stock fund to fiscal year 1985 as a refund to the operation and maintenance customer accounts instead of being factored into the fiscal year 1986 fuel rates. The Senate bill contained a reduction in authorization of $365.5 million for the same reason.

Since the time action was taken on the House bill and Senate amendment, significant additional savings in fuel costs have been identified. Therefore, the conferees agreed to a further reduction of $428.1 million.

The allocation of the stock fund fuel refund agreed to by the conferees as well as the allocation contained in the House bill and Senate amendment are shown as follows:

[Amounts in millions of dollars]

Major account	House bill	Senate amendment	Conference action
Army	−18.0	−29.6	−165.5
Navy	−100.0	−120.4	−297.5

Air National Guard	−18.0	−21.6	−31.6
Total	−303.1	−365.5	−793.6

Foreign currency exchange rate reductions

The House bill reduced the operation and maintenance request for authorization by $282.6 million due to estimated improvements in the value of the dollar in foreign currency markets substantially above the level assumed when the fiscal year 1985 Department of Defense budget was prepared. The Senate amendment contained a total reduction of $479.9 million.

The House recedes.

The conferees agreed to allocate the reduction as follows:

[Amounts in millions of dollars]

Major account	House bill	Senate amendment	Conference action
Army	−205.0	−309.8	−309.8
Navy	−29.2	−58.4	−58.4
Marine Corps	−7.4	−14.8	−14.8
Air Force	−41.0	−94.2	−94.2

Total	−282.6	−479.9	−479.9

Support to former Public Health Service hospitals

The House bill reduced the Army and Navy operation and maintenance request by $6 million associated with estimated savings in support to former Public Health Service hospitals that have been redesignated at uniformed services treatment facilities. The Senate amendment authorized the amount requested.

Although the conferees believe near-term savings of this magnitude are uncertain, they intend that the Department of Defense and the services procure the maximum amount of quality medical care possible for each health care dollar expended and plan to monitor closely the costs of operating the uniformed services treatment facilities (as designated by Public Law 97-99 and 98-94) in comparison to both the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services (CHAMPUS) and direct care system.

The conferees are concerned about possible high cost growth in the future and expect the Department of Defense to direct aggressive management attention to this program in the future.

The House recedes.

Navy ship overhauls

The House bill increased authorization by $71 million for two auxiliary ship overhauls that were not contained in the President's request. The Senate amendment reduced authorization from the request by $190.8 million and deleted the scheduled overhaul of a guided missile cruiser.

The conferees believe that the Navy's unfunded backlog of ship overhauls should be eliminated and authorized the induction of all three ships in fiscal year 1985. However, the conferees believe that the authorized Navy Ship overhaul program can be executed for $65 million below earlier estimates due to emerging contract savings and enhanced productivity. Therefore, the conferees agreed to a total increase of $6 million above President's request.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

Authorization of appropriations (sec. 301)

Section 301(a) of the House bill would authorize funds for operation and maintenance purposes by major account title (Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Air Force, Defense Agencies, Army Reserve, Navy Reserve, Marine Corps Reserve, Air Force Reserve, Army National Guard, Air National Guard, National Board for The Promotion of Rifle Practice—Army, Claims—Defense, and Court of Military Appeals—Defense) and specifically by budget activity (Strategic Forces, General Purpose Forces, Communications and Intelligence, Airlift and Sealift, Central Supply and Maintenance, Training, Medical, and Other General Personnel Activities, Administration, and Support to other Nations). Section 18(a) of the Senate amendment would authorize funds for operation and maintenance purposes by major account title only.

The Senate recedes.

National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice

Section 301(1) of the House bill provides for separate authorization of operation and maintenance appropriations for the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice and Expenses of the Secretary of the Army. Section 118(a) of the Senate bill provides for a one-sum authorization of operation and maintenance appropriations for the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice.

The Senate recedes.

Claims, defense

Section 301(m) of the House bill provides for the authorization of operation and maintenance appropriations for Claims, Defense, not otherwise provided for, of claims authorized by law to be paid by the Department of Defense (except for civil functions). Section 118(a) of the Senate amendment provides for a one-sum authorization of operation and maintenance appropriations for Defense claims.

The Senate recedes.

Court of Military Appeals, defense

Section 301(n) of the House bill provides for authorization of operation and maintenance appropriations for salaries and expenses for the United States Court of Military Appeals. Section 118(a) of the Senate amendment provides for a one-sum authorization of operation and maintenance appropriations for the Court of Military Appeals.

The Senate recedes.

Contingency funds for the unified and specific commands (sec. 303)

Section 120 of the Senate bill would authorize the Secretary of Defense to make available contingency funds for the unified and specified commands to the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The House bill had no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Authorization of appropriations for working-capital funds (sec. 304)

Section 303 of the House bill provides for the authorization of appropriations for working capital funds of the Department of Defense. Section 119 of the Senate amendment provides for the authorization of appropriations for the "use of the Armed Forces of the United States and other activities and agencies of the Department of Defense for providing capital for working capital funds. . . ."

The Senate recedes.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Amendments to section 2208 of title 10 (sec. 305)

The conferees agreed to amend section 2208 of title 10, United States Code, by adding two new subsections.

Sale of articles manufactured by certain arsenals

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 306) that would permit the sale of articles manufactured by certain arsenals for use in developing products to be sold to agencies of the United States or foreign countries.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Asset capitalization program

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 304) that would amend section 2208 of title 10, United States Code, requiring the application of at least three percent of industrial fund revenues toward the replacement of capital equipment in fiscal year 1985, at least four percent in fiscal year 1986, and at least five percent in fiscal year 1987 and thereafter.

Mindful of past neglect of capital equipment requirements and significant funding reductions the asset capitalization program has experienced in recent years, the conferees recognize the need for mandated graduated funding increases through fiscal year 1987 to allow the Department of Defense to meet its most critical capital equipment replacement needs at industrial-funded activities. However, the conferees believe that mandating that level of funding beyond fiscal year 1987 is not appropriate at this time and should be contingent upon a review of program requirements during consideration of the fiscal year 1988 budget request.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would delete the words "and each fiscal year thereafter".

Administrative transition provisions for Navy stock fund management change (sec. 306)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 305) that would amend section 2208(g) of title 10, United States Code, to permit the issuance of withdrawal credits to the Navy customer account from the Navy stock fund in connection with the transfer of the procurement of aviation depot level repairable parts from the aircraft procurement account to the Navy stock fund.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Limitation on contracting out core logistics functions (sec. 307)

Section 310 of the House bill would place certain limits on the contracting out of core logistics functions in accordance with procedures established by Office of Management and Budget (OMB) Circular A-76. First, it would require that each service Secretary and the Director of each Defense agency identify core logistics functions. Second, it would exempt core logistics functions from cost comparisons conducted under the provisions of OMB Circular A-76. Third, waiver of this exemption could only be exercised by the service Secretary or Director of the Defense Agency involved. Fourth, such waiver could not take effect until the Secretary or Director concerned had submitted a report on the waiver to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives and 30 days of continuous session of Congress had elapsed. Fifth, a report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives identifying core logistics function by specific function would be required on or before April 1, 1985. Finally, during the period between the date of enactment of the Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 1985 and the submission of the report identifying core logistics functions, no Department of Defense logistics function could be contracted out in accordance with the procedures and requirements of OMB Circular A-76.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 1051) with the following differences. First, it would require that the Secretary of Defense to designate core logistics function and waive the exemption from cost comparison in accordance with OMB Circular A-76. Second, it would not require a "hold and wait" period from the time the Committees on Armed Services are notified of such a waiver and its implementation. Finally, the provision contains no moratorium on the contracting out of Department of Defense logistics functions between the enactment of the Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 1985 and the submission of the report designating core logistics functions.

The conferees agreed to the Senate provision requiring that the Secretary of Defense designate core logistics functions and waive the exemption from cost comparison in accordance with OMB Circular A-76. The conferees also agreed to a House provision requiring a "hold and wait" period from the time the Committees on Armed Services are notified that such a waiver and its implementation, but agreed to change the duration of that period from 30 days of continuous session of Congress to 20 legislative or 40 calendar days, whichever occurs first. The conferees further agreed to delete the House provision for a moratorium on the contracting out of Department of Defense logistics functions during the period between the date of enactment of the Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 1985 and the submission of the report identifying core logistics functions.

The House recedes with an amendment.

Consulting and related services (sec. 308)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1044) that would preclude the Department of Defense from obligating or expending more than $1,302,599,000 in fiscal year 1985 for consulting and related services.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Restriction on reduction in ports of origin for certain cargo carried on vessels of the Military Sealift Command (sec. 309)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1049) that would prohibit the use of funds authorized to be appropriated in this act to reduce the number of Atlantic and Gulf Coast ports at which breakbulk cargo shipments originate for shipment on Military Sealift Command (MSC) vessels with a Pacific Ocean destination.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment. The prohibition would apply only to those MSC vessel shipments that transit the Panama Canal and have a port of destination on the Pacific Ocean outside the continental United States and the prohibition would cease to apply with respect to a proposed reduction 30 days after the date on which the Congress receives a report from the Secretary of Defense describing the proposed reduction, but in no case before February 1, 1985.

Introduction of U.S. Armed Forces into Central America (sec. 310)

Sections 312 and 313 of the House bill provided that none of the funds authorized in the bill could be used for the purpose of introducing U.S. Armed Forces into Central America for combat unless the Congress declared war or enacted specific authorization for such introduction or such introduction is necessary to meet a clear and present danger of hostile attack upon the United States or to provide protection for the U.S. embassy or to evacuate U.S. government personnel or U.S. citizens.

Section 314 provided that nothing in title III of the bill should be construed to supersede or amend the War Powers Resolution.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would provide that it is the sense of the Congress that the United States should not introduce U.S. Armed Forces into Central America for combat. The amendment also provides that in the event present circumstances change which the President believes requires the introduction of U.S. Armed Forces into Central America, the President should consult with Congress prior to any decision to introduce U.S. Armed Forces and such introduction must comply with the war Powers Resolution.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Operation and maintenance of certain T-43 aircraft

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 307) that would require that two T-43 aircraft, currently being operated by the Air National Guard Detachment 1, be permanently assigned to the detachment.

There was no similar provision in the Senate bill.

The House recedes.

Limitation on use of aircraft for certain civilian law enforcement purposes

Section 309 of the House bill would place limits on the use of Armed Forces' radar detection aircraft for support of civilian law enforcement agencies.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed that in view of the decision taken by the Department of the Treasury to continue development and fielding of specially-modified P-3A Orion aircraft to be loaned by the Navy for Customs Air Operations that such a restriction was no longer necessary.

The House recedes.

Resolution of U.S. citizen claim against Honduras

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 311) that would require the Secretary of Defense to take appropriate action to resolve the claim of a U.S. citizen for property in Honduras, now the site of the Regional Military Training Center.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

It is the sense of the conferees that claims by U.S. citizens arising in connection with the establishment by Honduras of the Regional Military Training Center should be quickly and justly resolved by restitution of property or the prompt payment of just compensation, or both. These claims should be resolved through negotiation or other appropriate means agreed upon by the claimant and the Government of Honduras, as required by the Treaty of Friendship, Commerce and Consular Rights between the United States and Honduras and consistent with the commitments communicated to the Government of Honduras in connection with the designation of Honduras as a beneficiary under the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act.

The Secretary of State should continue to lend all appropriate assistance to settlement of such claims by the Government of Honduras or by a third party procedure.

The Secretary of Defense, in consultation with the Secretary of State, is directed to submit a report to the Congress not later than December 1, 1984, on:

(1) the status of efforts to resolve outstanding claims of U.S. citizens arising in connection with the establishment by Honduras of the Regional Military Training Center in Honduras;

(2) the status of any plans of the Government of Honduras to relocate such center; and

(3) the status of all legal proceedings with respect to such claims.

In the event that these claims have not been appropriately resolved by January 1, 1985, or the Government of Honduras has failed to agree to a binding third party procedure for resolving these claims by that date, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury and the United States Trade Representative are to begin a review of the status of Honduras under the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act and related expropriation legislation.

The Secretary of State shall report to the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives on the review no later than March 1, 1985.

The conferees agreed that this matter could represent a unique circumstance in which the property of a U.S. citizen in a foreign country may have been expropriated by the host government for military use, including the participation of U.S. military training assistance personnel. They further agreed that in view of provisions to be introduced in the Resolution of Continuing Appropriations, Fiscal Year 1985 (H.J. Res. 648) that could preclude appropriation for further operation of the Regional Military Training Center (RMTC) until this claim is settled, and that would prohibit the establishment of a permanent RMTC (including the functions of the School of the Americas) until settlement, this provision in the House bill is unnecessary.

The House recedes.

Selected Reserve strength (sec. 411).—The House bill reduced the Administration's request for average strength for the Army National Guard and the Army Reserve by a total of 9,310. The Senate amendment reduced the Administration's request for the Army National Guard, the Army Reserve, the Naval Reserve, and the Air National Guard by a total of 8,512.

The conference agreement is summarized in the following table:

Reserve Forces	Administration request	House	Senate	Conference
Army National Guard	440,100	435,117	435,250	435,117
Army Reserve	288,400	284,073	285,600	284,073
Naval Reserve	124,200	124,200	124,100	124,100
Marine Corps Reserve	44,300	44,300	44,300	44,300
Air National Guard	106,200	106,200	105,438	105,438
Air Force Reserve	72,900	72,900	72,900	72,900
Coast Guard Reserve	12,500	12,500	12,500	12,500
Total	1,088,600	1,079,290	1,080,088	1,078,428

Number of Air National Guard flying units.—The Senate amendment also contained a provision (sec. 126(c)) requiring that, within the authorized strength prescribed for the Air National Guard, no less than 91 flying units—the current number of such units—be maintained during fiscal year 1985.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Reserves participating in independent military or paramilitary activities overseas.—The conferees note with satisfaction the outstanding improvement that reserve forces have achieved over the past several years. These forces, today, are better trained, better equipped, and better able to carry out the greater responsibility that has been thrust on them.

The conferees are concerned, however, with reports that members of the national guard and reserve have participated as private citizens in military and paramilitary activities outside of the United States. Although such activities may not be inconsistent with U.S. policy and goals in any particular instance, such activities could lead to a misinterpretation of government policy. Such activities also raise questions as to whether they are consistent with the neutrality laws (section 960, et. seq., of title 18, United States Code).

Of greater concern to the conferees is the impact that such activities could have on the mobilization capabilities of the reserve forces. Obviously, costly training is provided to ensure that the reserve forces can accomplish their mission. If reserve and national guard members were not available to respond to activities directed by the National Command Authority, the resources devoted to preparing these forces would have been wasted. Availability could be hampered if members were absent from the country for extended periods. Additionally, significant political problems could arise if members were injured, killed or captured while participating in activities that may or may not be expressly supported by the U.S. government. The fact that members were acting as private citizens could be overshadowed by the implication that their membership in the U.S. reserve components connotes U.S. government complicity.

The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to review current laws, directives and regulations with an eye toward strengthening restrictions that would preclude members of the reserve components from participating in independent military or paramilitary activities other than those directed or authorized by the U.S. government. The Secretary of Defense is directed to provide a report on these issues to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives by March 1, 1985, together with any recommendations he may have.

Full-time support (sec. 412).—The House bill reduced the Administration's request for full-time strength levels of the Army National Guard and the Army Reserve by a total of 9,310. The Senate amendment reduced the Administration's request for the Army National Guard, the Army Reserve, the Naval Reserve, and the Air National Guard by a total of 10,000.

The conference agreement is summarized in the following table:

Full-time support	Administration request	House	Senate	Conference
Army National Guard	26,583	21,600	20,583	20,583
Army Reserve	15,027	10,700	11,427	10,700
Naval Reserve	15,410	15,410	15,210	15,210
Marine Corps Reserve	1,129	1,129	1,129	1,129
Air National Guard	7,224	7,224	7,024	7,024
Air Force Reserve	623	623	623	623
Total	65,996	56,686	55,996	55,269

The conferees intend that the reductions should be allocated to the full-time manning program of each reserve component consistent with mission priorities.

PART C—MILITARY TRAINING

Legislative provision adopted

Reduction in number of students required to be in a unit of the Junior Reserve Officers' Training Corps for the unit to be maintained (sec. 422).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 423) that would make permanent the authority to maintain a unit of the Junior Reserve Officers' Training Corps at any high school as long as there are at least 100 students or 10 percent of the student body, whichever is less, enrolled. Existing permanent law requires a minimum of 100 students; the 10 percent alternative criterion was authorized in the annual Defense Authorization Act for the past four years.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

TITLE V—DEFENSE PERSONNEL MANAGEMENT

PART A—CIVILIAN PERSONNEL

Legislative provisions adopted

Civilian personnel end strength for fiscal year 1985 (sec. 501).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 131) that would authorize a fiscal year end strength for Department of Defense civilian personnel of 1,078,223.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 501) that would waive the requirement of a civilian personnel end strength authorization for fiscal year 1985.

The House bill also contained a provision (sec. 1105) that would prohibit the management of Department of Defense civilian personnel by end strength constraints.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes on the fiscal year 1985 civilian personnel ceiling.

With respect to managing through end strength, the Senate recedes with an amendment limiting the prohibition to fiscal year 1985. The conferees direct the Department of Defense and the Office of Management and Budget to provide the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives with a report on the results of the change.

Civilian personnel ceilings on industrially-funded activities during fiscal year 1984 (sec. 502).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 132) that would exempt from the ceiling established by section 601 of the fiscal year 1984 Defense Authorization Act (Public Law 98-94) those civilian personnel employed at industrially-funded activities in excess of the levels employed in those activities on September 30, 1982.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

PART B—OFFICER PERSONNEL

Legislative provisions adopted

Temporary increase in the number of general and flag officers authorized to be on active duty (sec. 511).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 171) that would authorize a ceiling of 1,100 general and flag officers through September 30, 1985, an increase of 27 over the current ceiling that took effect on October 1, 1981. These 27 additional positions would be divided among the services and among the one-, two-, three- and four-star ranks as provided by policy and statute, except that, of the total provided to the Navy, two more than would otherwise be designated as three-star positions could be so designated, and of the total provided to the Marine Corps, one more than would otherwise be designated as three-star positions could be so designated so long as the designation was for the commander-in-chief of the U.S. Central Command.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would retain the current ceiling of 1,073 general and flag officers but, within the total number authorized, would permit the Navy to designate three additional three-star positions as would be provided under the Senate amendment, the Marine Corps to designate two additional three-star positions as would be provided under the Senate amendment, and the Air Force to designate one additional four-star position as would be provided under the Senate amendment.

Authority to consider for promotion of certain Army reserve general officers (sec. 512).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 173) that would authorize the Secretary of the Army in certain cases to waive the requirement that a reserve officer be in an active status for at least one year before being considered for promotion. The provision would permit a reserve general officer who has completed a tenure in one position and has been for a period of less than one year in an inactive status while awaiting a new position commensurate with his grade to be considered for promotion.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Authority to retain in active status until age 60 up to 10 Army reserve brigadier generals (sec. 513).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 504) that would authorize the Army to retain in an active status up to 10 officers in the reserve grade of brigadier general until they reach age 60. Similar authority currently exists for the Air Force.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Extension of authority for the temporary promotion of certain Navy lieutenants (sec. 514).—Under current law certain Navy lieutenants who possess skills for which there is a critical shortage and who are serving in positions designated to be held by lieutenant commanders may be promoted to the grade of lieutenant commander. Authority to make these promotions outside of the constraints of law governing the normal promotion of naval officers expires on September 30, 1984.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 176) that would extend this authority for two years until September 30, 1986.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Repeal of four-year limitation on period an officer may be assigned to the Army Staff or the Air Staff (sec. 515).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 505) that would repeal the four-year limitation on assignments of individual officers to the headquarters branches of the Army and the Air Force.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

PART C—AMENDMENTS TO PROVISIONS OF LAW ENACTED BY THE DEFENSE PERSONNEL MANAGEMENT ACT

Legislative provisions adopted

Amendments to provisions of law enacted by the Defense Officer Personnel Management Act (sec. 521-533).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 503) that would effect a series of 12 minor changes and refinements in the Defense Officer Personnel Management Act (Public Law 96-513). The House provision would: (1) allow officers separating from active duty to accept reserve appointments without loss of grade; (2) raise the statutory ceilings on regular officers of the Air Force, Navy, and Marine Corps; (3) clarify the law concerning the ability of general and flag officers to serve in temporary grades during changes in status; (4) permit means other than boards of officers for deciding whether officers should show cause for retention on active duty; (5) authorize the removal from further consideration for promotion of officers who twice fail of selection for promotion to major or lieutenant commander; (6) authorize service Secretaries to set the effective dates of promotion for officers whose promotions were delayed; (7) authorize special selection boards for warrant officers; (8) permit discharge of reserve officers who are not qualified for promotion to the grade of 0-2; (9) permit longer tenure and promotion above the grade of 0-5 for limited duty officers; (10) permit permanent appointment of limited duty officers without loss of grade; (11) authorize service Secretaries to determine the amount of severance pay in certain cases; and (12) allow consideration of certain recalled retired officers for promotion.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 178) that would effect 7 additional technical changes to the Defense Officer Personnel Management Act. The Senate provision would: (1) reestablish a promotion zone for officers who were selected for promotion below the zone but were later removed from the promotion list for cause; (2) clarify the limitations on separation pay for reservists; (3) clarify that the advancement on the retired list permitted after 30 years of active and retired service is to the highest grade held, whether temporary or permanent; (4) further ensure that officers who accept permanent positions at the United States Air Force Academy and the United States Military Academy receive neither penalty nor windfall with respect to promotions; (5) replace the term "lineal list" with "active duty list" with respect to the promotion of Naval and Marine Corps Reserve officers; (6) repeal a redundant provision concerning the recall of retired regular enlisted members of the Navy and Marine Corps; and (7) correct the inadvertent omission of one category of personnel (those receiving separation pay) from the law relating to selection of a home for purposes of travel and transportation allowances.

The House recedes with an amendment incorporating all 19 adjustments to the Defense Officer Personnel Management Act and clarifying the provision relating to officers assigned permanent positions at the academies.

PART D—OFFICER TRAINING PROGRAMS

Legislative provisions adopted

Clarification of authority to order certain cadets and midshipmen to active duty (sec. 541).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 174) that would clarify the meaning of the phrase "unless sooner separated" with respect to the authority granted the service Secretaries in sections 4348, 6959, and 9348 of title 10, United States Code, to order former cadets and midshipmen of the service academies to active duty. The provision would relate the phrase to separation from the service rather than to separation from the academy.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment clarifying that an academy cadet or midshipman is obligated, first, to complete the course of instruction at the academy unless he is prevented from doing so by his being sooner separated from the academy and, second, to accept his degree and commission and to serve the requisite period of time on active duty unless he is prevented from doing so by his sooner being separated from the service.

Extension of military service obligation of service academy and ROTC cadets and midshipmen (sec. 542).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 175) that would clarify that the authority granted the Secretary of Defense is section 1022 of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1984 (Public Law 98-94), to extend military service obligations from six to eight years, applies to graduates of the service academies and the ROTC scholarship program.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Eligibility for advanced training in senior ROTC program (sec. 543).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 422) that would delete the requirement that students have two years remaining in their degree programs in order to enroll in advanced Reserve Officers' Training Corps (ROTC) training. This provision would not change the obligation to complete all the academic and field training requirements of advanced Reserve Officers' Training Corps training.

The section would also permit the service Secretaries to accept for advanced training persons who have not yet completed the first two years of the Senior Reserve Officers' Training Corps program or performed the six weeks' field training or practice cruise so long as the enrollees agree to complete such field training or practice cruise.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

PART E—MISCELLANEOUS

Legislative provisions adopted

Women in the armed forces (sec. 551).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 502) that would require the Air Force to establish female accession goals of 19 percent for fiscal year 1986, 22 percent for fiscal year 1987, and 25 percent for fiscal year 1988. The provision also would establish a statutory basis for the Defense Advisory Committee on Women in the Service (DACOWITS). Finally, the provision would direct the Secretary of Defense to study and provide Congress with an analysis of the most current data on the propensity of women to serve in the military.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment establishing female accession goals of 19 percent in fiscal year 1987 and 22 percent in 1988, deleting a stated goal in 1986 and deleting the provision that would establish a statutory basis for DACOWITS.

Reserve forces readiness (sec. 552).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 506) that would prescribe seven initiatives to increase the effectiveness of the reserve components: (1) direct the development of a uniform, objective system for evaluating the effectiveness of reserve units; (2) direct the testing of a program linking resource allocation to effectiveness; (3) direct an increase in full-time manning of the Army reserve components to 14 percent by fiscal year 1989; (4) direct a study of longer reserve training periods; (5) direct the development of a plan for periodic texting of all mobilization force elements and their sustainability, to include the conduct of at least one major mobilization exercise each year; (6) increase contact with the enhance retention of members of the individual ready reserve; and (7) establish separate budget line items for equipment for each reserve component.

The Senate recedes with amendments.

Section 506(b) in the House bill would require the Secretary of Defense to conduct a test to evaluate the feasibility of allocating equipment to units of reserve components based on a measure of effectiveness of such units. The conferees agreed to an amendment that would change the requirement to conduct a test to a requirement to conduct a study.

Section 506(g) in the House bill would require that the fiscal year 1986 Defense budget "shall set forth the amounts requested for equipment for each reserve component as separate specific line items." The conferees agreed to delete this provision with the understanding that the Secretary of Defense will identify in budget justification documents for the fiscal year 1986 budget the following information:

Major end items of equipment proposed to be procured with funds included in the fiscal year 1986 budget for each reserve component; and

Major end items of equipment (both new items and items transferred from the active forces) expected to be transferred to each reserve component during fiscal year 1986.

The conferees emphasize that section 506(a) of the House bill, which has been included in the conference report with minor amendments, does not require the Secretary of Defense to adopt a single readiness reporting system for both active and reserve forces, but rather one in which the readiness of active and reserve forces can be compared.

Precedence of award of Purple Heart (sec. 553).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 179) that would specify that the Purple Heart be ranked in precedence among awards immediately below the lowest decoration awarded by a service for valor.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Study of military regulations with regard to religious practices (sec. 554).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 507) that would permit a service member to wear unobtrusive religious headgear, such as a skullcap, if that person's religious practices included the wearing of such headgear and if the headgear did not interfere with the performance of the particular military duties assigned to the individual. The section provided that this provision would expire one year after the date of enactment.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1046) that would require a report by January 1, 1985, recommending any changes in service regulations necessary and appropriate to permit service members to abide by the tenets of their faiths while still maintaining discipline and uniformity of appearance. To perform this study, a joint service study group would be created comprised of 12 members: two from each service appointed by the chief of each military service and one non-military citizen appointed by the chief of chaplains of each of the services.

The House recedes with an amendment that would reconfigure the study group to consist of eight members appointed by the Secretary of Defense: one nominated from each of the four services by each of the service Secretaries, three nominated by the Armed Forces Chaplains Board, and one nominated by the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Manpower, Installations and Logistics. The study group would report to the Secretary of Defense on potential conflicts between religious practices and military discipline by February 1, 1985. The Secretary of Defense would then report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives and issue implementing instructions to the service Secretaries within 20 days; the service Secretaries would be required to make any needed changes in service regulations within 30 additional days.

The conferees note that they are extending the deadline for the report by one month to give the Department of Defense additional time to conduct a thorough review of this issue. The deadline is important so that the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives will have adequate time to review the conclusions of the study group during consideration of the fiscal year 1986 Defense authorization bill. The conferees hope that the study group will be able to articulate an umbrella philosophy that can then be applied in the event of any future conflict between religious practice and military practice.

The conferees note that this issue was brought to public prominence over the narrower question of the wearing of yarmulkes and expect the study group, while addressing the broader issues, not to lose sight of the immediate issue that prompted creation of the study group.

The conferees also note that concerns have been raised about how to distinguish between practices that stem from genuine faith and practices that could be used simply as a challenge to military discipline or as an excuse for failure to comply with legitimate orders. The conferees expect the study group to address ways to resolve that issue.

TITLE VI— COMPENSATION AND OTHER PERSONNEL BENEFITS

PART A—BASIC PAY AND ALLOWANCES

Legislative provisions adopted

Military pay raise for fiscal year 1985 (sec. 601).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 601) that would increase by 3.5 percent, effective January 1, 1985, the rates of basic pay for members of the uniformed services (other than for pay grade E-1) and the rates of monthly cadet and midshipman pay. The basic allowance for subsistence would not be increased; the basic allowance for quarters would be adjusted in conjunction with a revision of the variable housing allowance (section 602 of the House bill).

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 141) that would increase by 4 percent, effective January 1, 1985, basic pay for all military personnel except those in pay grade E-1 with less than 4 months of active duty. The provision would also increase the Basic Allowance for Subsistence by 4 percent. The basic allowance for quarters would be adjusted in conjunction with a revision of the variable housing allowance (section 142 of the Senate amendment).

The House recedes.

Basic allowance for quarters and variable housing allowance (sec. 602).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 601) that would set the rates for the basic allowance for quarters effective January 1, 1985, at 70 percent of national median housing costs with respect to each pay grade. A related provision of the House bill (sec. 602) would authorize payment of a variable housing allowance where the local median cost of housing for a pay grade exceeds 85 percent of the national median cost of housing for that pay grade. Alaska and Hawaii would be included in the variable housing allowance program, but service members stationed there on January 1, 1985, and receiving overseas housing allowance benefits would continue to be eligible for those benefits. Finally, certain housing allowance windfalls would be eliminated.

The Senate amendment (sec. 142) contained similar provisions, except the rates for the basic allowance for quarters would be set at 65 percent of national median housing costs and the threshold for the variable housing allowance would be set at 80 percent of national median housing costs. Alaska and Hawaii would not be included in the program. The Senate provision further differed from the House provision in two technical respects.

The House recedes with an amendment that would authorize, in the future, the variable housing allowance in lieu of the overseas housing allowance for personnel assigned to Alaska and Hawaii.

Reimbursements for accommodations in place of quarters (sec. 603).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 143) that would extend for one year the authority to pay basic allowance for quarters and variable housing allowance to naval personnel deprived of shipboard quarters. The Senate amendment would limit the amount authorized for such purposes to $1.4 million during fiscal year 1985.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Clarification of authority to deny certain members without dependents right to elect to receive basic allowance for quarters rather than occupy military quarters (sec. 604).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 606) that would clarify the authority of the Secretary of a military department to deny a service member the option of living in off-base quarters when it is determined that a training mission would be adversely affected.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Commutation of rations for reservists on inactive duty training who are unable to obtain rations-in-kind (sec. 605).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 607) that would commute the rations, in other words provide a cash allowance, for enlisted members of the reserve components who are unable to obtain rations-in-kind for their meals during inactive duty training.

The Senate bill contained a similar provision (sec. 145), except that the Senate provision limited the authority to the Coast Guard Reserve.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees note that only the Coast Guard has requested this authority and intend that it should be used very sparingly and only when a specific and unusual requirement can be demonstrated.

Forfeiture of accrued leave by certain members who serve on active duty less than six months (sec. 606).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 152) that would require forfeiture of a service member's unused accrued leave when that member is discharged before completing six months on active duty for failure to serve satisfactorily.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to provide discretionary authority to the relevant service Secretary.

Denial of credit for time spent in a delayed enlistment program for purposes of computation of basic pay (sec. 607).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 144) that would terminate the authority to count time spent in the delayed enlistment pool in determining years of service for purposes of computing basic pay.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

PART B—TRAVEL AND TRANSPORTATION

Legislative provisions adopted

Emergency medical transportation for dependents of members stationed in Alaska or Hawaii (sec. 611).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 608) that would authorize commercial transportation at government expense for dependents who accompany service members on their tours of duty in Alaska and Hawaii and who require medical care not locally available. The House provision also would include duty stations in Alaska and Hawaii in the authority provided by the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1984 (Public Law 98-94), for one government-funded round-trip each year for student dependents of military personnel stationed outside the 48 contiguous states to attend secondary or undergraduate school in the United States.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment authorizing transportation for medical care but not authorizing dependent student travel.

Transportation incident to emergency leave for members whose residences are in possessions of the United States (sec. 612).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 610) that would expand the present authority to provide transportation incident to emergency leave to include transportation for military members and their dependents from the continental United States to their residences in possessions of the United States.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Travel pay for certain reserve component instructors (sec. 613).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 150) that would authorize reimbursement for travel expenses incurred by service members not on active duty who perform instructor duty at reserve training meetings more than 100 miles from their homes.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment measuring the 100 miles from the usual training location of the reserve school to which the member is assigned rather than the home of a member.

Transportation between residence and place of work for senior defense officials (sec. 614).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 151) that would authorize the use of government vehicles to transport from home to office the Deputy Secretary of Defense, the Undersecretaries of Defense, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and the members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. This provision would authorize portal-to-portal transportation for eight Department of Defense officials who have, to date, received such service but who would lose it at the end of the 98th Congress as a result of a ruling by the Comptroller General that only heads of departments are entitled to such transport.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

PART C—BONUSES AND SPECIAL PAYS

Legislative provisions adopted

Extension of enlistment and reenlistment bonus authorities for active forces (sec. 621).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 603) that would extend the authority to pay enlistment and reenlistment bonuses for five years, until September 30, 1989.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 146) that would extend the authority to pay bonuses for two years, until September 30, 1986.

The House recedes with an amendment extending the authority to pay bonuses for three years, until September 30, 1987.

The Senate amendment also contained a provision (sec. 1028) that would remove the present statutory ceiling of $20,000 on the selective reenlistment bonus. However, under the Senate provision, no more than 10 percent of the selective reenlistment bonuses paid during any fiscal year could exceed $25,000.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment increasing the current $20,000 ceiling for the selective reenlistment bonus to $30,000. However, no more than 10 percent of the selective reenlistment bonuses paid during any fiscal year could exceed $20,000.

The conferees direct that the higher bonus amounts be accommodated without any increase in the amounts requested for bonuses for fiscal year 1985.

Extension of special pay for certain aviation career officers (sec. 622).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 147) that would extend the authority to pay aviation officer continuation pay for one year, until September 30, 1985, but would limit the eligibility for the pay to Navy aviators. The provision also directed a report on the adequacy of current career pay for aviation specialties.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Special pay for sea duty and special skills for enlisted members (sec. 623).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1028) that would increase the rates of career sea pay for enlisted members in pay grades E-6 through E-9 and would provide incremental increases in this pay for sea duty beyond the 12-year point. The provision would also replace the existing authority for proficiency pay with a new authority for a special pay of up to $275 per month that could be paid to enlisted members who are required to perform extremely demanding duties or duties demanding an unusual degree of responsibility. In addition, the Senate provision would remove the present statutory ceiling of $20,000 on the selective reenlistment bonus, as previously discussed in section 621, relative to enlistment and reenlistment bonuses.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees direct that any use of these enhanced benefits be accommodated within the amounts requested for special pays for fiscal year 1985.

The conferees note that the increased rates of career sea pay should provide a substantial incentive for enlisted personnel to remain at sea. This, in turn, should ease sea-to-shore rotation pressures, thereby facilitating increased utilization of the reserves. The Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives will continue to closely monitor the progress being made by the Navy in expanding its utilization of the Naval Reserve.

Discontinuation of certain incentive pays for hazardous duty (sec. 624).—Currently, enlisted personnel receive $83 per month and officers receive $110 per month as an incentive to perform various types of hazardous duty.

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 148) that would increase the rates payable to enlisted personnel to $110 per month for the following seven duty assignments: flight deck duty, demolition duty, duty involving experimental stress, flying duty as a non-crew member, parachute duty, duty involving toxic fuels and propellants, and duty involving toxic pesticides and dangerous organisms.

The Senate provision would also increase the rate of hazardous duty incentive pay for flying duty as an enlisted crew member to a minimum of $110 per month.

Finally, the Senate provision would discontinue two hazardous duty incentive pays that are no longer necessary: glider pay and leprosy pay.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes on the discontinuation of glider and leprosy pay; the Senate recedes on all other provisions.

PART D—HEALTH CARE MATTERS

Legislative provisions adopted

Extension of medical and dental care for reserves and national guard (sec. 631).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 611) that would authorize medical and dental care for members of the reserve components who contract diseases or become ill during their inactive duty training. Under current law, such care is provided for those individuals who incur injuries during either inactive duty training or active duty for training and for those individuals who contract diseases or become ill during active duty for training.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Enhanced benefits coverage under CHAMPUS (sec. 632).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 161) that would authorize payment under the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services (CHAMPUS) for no more than one eye examination per year per person.

The Senate amendment would also direct that chiropractic care be included under CHAMPUS. Coverage would extend to manual manipulation of the spine and other routine chiropractic procedures prescribed by the Secretaries of Defense and Health and Human Services and not otherwise prohibited by law.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with amendments. One amendment would limit the eye examination authorization to dependents of active duty personnel. The other amendment, in lieu of the Senate provision, would direct the Department of Defense to conduct several demonstration projects on chiropractic care, utilizing the authority provided by section 1092 of title 10, United States Code. These demonstration projects should be structured to provide additional data on the benefits and cost of chiropractic care, including the extent to which chiropractic, as an alternative source of care, would replace other medical services, rather than merely adding to the program cost. The conferees intend that the scope of these demonstration projects be sufficiently broad to ensure that adequate data will be available upon which to base a future decision as to whether chiropractic should be provided in uniformed service facilities and under CHAMPUS.

Authority to provide dental care to certain dependents in facilities of the uniformed services (sec. 633).—Currently, dependents of active duty personnel are authorized dental care in facilities of the uniformed services on a limited basis. Dental care may be provided overseas or as a necessary adjunct of medical, surgical, or preventive treatment. However, routine dental care within the United States may be provided only where adequate civilian facilities are unavailable. Such care is provided on a space available basis.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 162) that would authorize dental care for dependents of active duty personnel in military facilities worldwide on a space available basis.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment delaying the effective date until July 1, 1985. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to submit a report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives no later than February 1, 1985, detailing the department's views on extension of dental care to dependents worldwide. That report should address the capability of dental facilities to accommodate active duty dependents; the amount of space available care projected to be available in each service; any additional projected costs of the expanded space available care; and the impact of expanded dependent dental care on the level of benefits provided to current beneficiaries.

The conferees emphasize that active duty dental needs are to be met first. The conferees further intend that extension of the space available benefit to nonactive duty beneficiaries should not be used as a basis for expanding the dental programs of the services. The conferees are particularly concerned that the services not attempt either to staff or size dental facilities based on the increased potential space available workload.

Study of use by CHAMPUS of Medicare prospective payment system (sec. 634).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 163) that would direct the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of Health and Human Services to study jointly the possible effects of the adoption by the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services (CHAMPUS) of a prospective payment system such as that utilized by Medicare. The study would also address the advisability and feasibility of statutorily linking provider participation in Medicare with provider participation in CHAMPUS.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

PART E—BENEFITS FOR SURVIVORS AND FORMER SPOUSES

Legislative provisions adopted

Elimination of certain social security offsets from the Survivor Benefit Plan (sec. 641).—Under current law, when a widow or widower becomes eligible for social security at age 62, the Survivor Benefit Plan annuity is reduced by the social security benefit to which the survivor is entitled based on the late member's military service. Regardless of the amount of the social security benefit attributable to that military service, however, the Survivor Benefit Plan annuity may be reduced by no more than 40 percent.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 158) that would eliminate the social security offset against the Survivor Benefit Plan annuity in the case of a survivor who is receiving social security benefits based on his or her own earnings, rather than a widow's or widower's benefit based on the late member's earnings.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment delaying the effective date until September 30, 1985. In the interim, the conferees intend that a comprehensive review of the current Survivor Benefit Plan program be conducted.

Authority to initiate payments under survivor annuity programs when the participant is missing (sec. 642).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 159) that would permit the service Secretary to determine that a participant in either the Retired Serviceman's Family Protection Plan (RSFPP) or the Survivor Benefit Plan (SBP) is missing under circumstances from which it can reasonably be concluded that such person is dead, provided the person has been absent for at least 30 days. As a result of such a determination, the beneficiary designated by the participant would be eligible to receive an annuity under either the Retired Serviceman's Family Protection Plan or the the Survivor Benefit Plan.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

Clarification of authority to enforce certain court orders in connection with the payment of retired or retainer pay to former spouses (sec. 643).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 160) that would eliminate the current requirement of the Uniformed Services Former Spouses' Protection Act (section 1408 of title 10, United States Code), that in order for a court order to cause direct payments of child support or alimony to a former spouse, it must specify that the payments be made from retired pay. The Senate provision would retain that requirement in the case of divisions of property, however. The Senate provision would further eliminate the current restriction that the court order or other documents served with the court order must include the social security number of the retiree.

The House bill contained no similar provision; however, the House had recently passed similar legislation, H.R. 5027.

The House recedes.

Clarification of authority to elect former spouses as beneficiaries under the Survivor Benefit Plan (sec. 644).—As a result of the enactment of the Uniformed Services Former Spouses' Protection Act, a military retiree may designate a former spouse as a beneficiary under the Survivior Benefit Plan. The Act specifies that the decision to make such a designation must be voluntary on the part of the retiree and can not be ordered by the court.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 160a) that would deem a retiree to have elected a former spouse as a beneficiary under the Survivor Benefit Plan if the Secretary concerned receives a request for such action from the former spouse and receives a copy of a court order that incorporates, ratifies, or approves a voluntary written agreement on the part of the retiree to designate the former spouse as the beneficiary under the Survivior Benefit Plan.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Miscellaneous rights and benefits for former spouses (sec. 645).—The Uniformed Services Former Spouses' Protection Act (Title X of Public Law 97-252) authorized medical, exchange, and commissary benefits for a limited group of long-term former spouses. These benefits are currently authorized for an unremarried former spouse whose marriage covered at least 20 years of military service. In addition, the coverage is not retroactive and applies only to divorces finalized on or after the effective date of the legislation—February 1, 1983. Further, the medical care benefit was limited to those former spouses who are not covered by employer-sponsored medical insurance.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 160d) that would relax the eligibility criteria for medical benefits. Although 20 years of marriage and 20 years of service would still be required, only 15-year overlap between marriage and service would be required. In addition, the benefits would be fully retroactive, rather than available only to those divorced after the effective date of the legislation.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with amendments. The medical, exchange and commissary benefits authorized by current law would be provided to all former spouses who have 20 years of marriage during which time the member served in the military for 20 years, regardless of the date of divorce.

In recognition of the fact that many other former spouses have also had a long-term association with the military, military medical coverage would, under certain circumstances, also be provided for those former spouses who have 15 years of overlap between the length of marriage and years of service. Those in this category with divorces finalized prior to April 1, 1985, would be entitled to full military medical care benefits subject to the same restrictions contained in current law: termination upon remarriage or in the case of employer-sponsored medical care. Those with divorces finalized after April 1, 1985, would be entitled to two years of transitional care in the military medical care system followed by the right to convert to a private health insurance plan with identical restrictions on remarriage and other medical coverage.

All other former spouses not meeting the 20/20/15 criteria would also be provided the option of electing coverage in the conversion plan. The decision as to who would be liable for the premium payments for this coverage would be determined as a part of the terms of individual divorce settlements.

The conversion of military health care coverage to a private insurance plan envisioned by the conferees is a common feature in the insurance industry in both the public and private sector. All insurance plans participating in the Federal employees' health benefit program are required to offer a conversion option to those individuals who lose their eligibility for coverage under their government health insurance plan. This could occur, for example, when the individual leaves government employment, when children reach age 22 and are no longer eligible for coverage under a family plan, or in the event of divorce. In addition, a majority of states require that insurance carriers offer conversion options under similar circumstances.

The conferees direct the Department of Defense to design a program to contract with one or more private insurance companies to provide, at a lower than individual rate and with a waiver of pre-existing conditions, a conversion policy. This conversion policy would be made available to all individuals who lose their entitlement to care in the military health care system: former spouses, military personnel leaving active duty and their dependents, and dependents of active duty personnel and retirees upon reaching majority. Such a conversion option would provide a significant benefit to all of these groups and would also provide a broader base of participants, thereby lowering the cost of the coverage and making such a program more attractive to private insurance carriers.

The conferees expect the Department of Defense to present Congress with complete plans for a coherent and workable program within 12 months. Two years of coverage are provided, however, to ensure that there is more than sufficient time to deal with any problems that may occur and to enact any enabling legislation that may be required. Should any insurmountable problem develop, however, the conferees envision extending the initial two years of transitional coverage for whatever additional period of time may be necessary to ensure that there is no disruption in the availability of medical care at a reasonable cost.

The conferees are concerned about the lack of uniformity among the services in procedures followed to implement the Former Spouses' Protection Act. An audit of the service finance center records by the General Accounting Office late last year indicated that there are significant differences in implementation among the services and also that insufficient information has often been provided in response to former spouses seeking to utilize the direct payment mechanism, thus necessitating repeated correspondence. For example, the General Accounting Office found:

that the Navy and Marine Corps have rejected certain formulas for division of retired pay that the Army and Air Force have accepted; that the services have used different definitions of creditable service; that the services have not been uniform in their interpretation of court orders providing for cost-of-living increases on the former spouses' portion of retired pay;

that the services have sent rejection letters to former spouses that failed to explain the options available to the former spouses or the actions needed to conform with legislative requirements; and that the services have used substantially different procedures in issuing military identification cards to former spouses.

The conferees are concerned that these differences may impede the orderly enforcement of valid state court orders on behalf of former spouses in accordance with the terms of the Uniformed Services Former Spouses' Protection Act. Therefore, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to ensure uniform implementation of the Act by the services to the greatest extent possible.

Finally, the conferees are concerned that the individual service Secretaries have not sufficiently exercised their secretarial designation authority as urged in the conference report on the Former Spouses's Protection Act to provide medical care to deserving former spouses who suffer from medical conditions or disabilities attributable to or arising from the nature or location of the service performed by the service member. The conferees, therefore, direct the Secretaries to review their present eligibility criteria for secretarial designations to ensure that deserving individuals are not excluded from this needed care.

PART F—MISCELLANEOUS

Legislative provisions adopted

Legal assistance programs (sec. 651).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 157) that would create an entitlement to space available legal assistance for active duty military personnel and authorize space available legal assistance for military dependents and retirees.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment making the authority wholly discretionary and subject to availability of space for all beneficiaries. The conferees do not intend by adopting this provision to expand the entitlement to legal assistance beyond that afforded before the effective date of this provision. The conferees intend, simply, to clarify the existing status of the benefit. The conferees further intend that the adoption of this provision should not be interpreted to support requests for additional facilities or personnel beyond that required to accomplish the direct military mission.

Limitation on transportation of motor vehicles through Guam (sec. 652).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 609) that would limit to 200 per month the number of privately-owned vehicles shipped at government expense from Guam by members of the armed forces assigned other than to Guam. The authority for any such shipments would expire on September 30, 1985. The section also directed a report from the Department of Defense on how to handle the problems that result because Japanese law requires such substantial modifications of American vehicles before they enter Japan that American military personnel assigned there are effectively prevented from bringing their personal vehicles with them.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 153) that would limit monthly shipments to 100 vehicles and would terminate the program on March 31, 1985.

The Senate recedes with an amendment limiting the number of vehicles to 100 per month, while keeping the termination date of September 30, 1985.

Personal vehicles of United States military personnel in Japan (sec. 653).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1030) that would express the sense of the Congress that the Administration seek agreement with Japan to allow American service personnel to bring their personal vehicles into Japan without modification and would direct a report within 90 days of enactment on the progress of such negotiations.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Authority for voluntary withholding of state income taxes from retired and retainer pay (sec. 654).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 612) that would authorize the Secretary concerned to enter into an agreement with any state to withhold income taxes from the paychecks of persons receiving military retired or retainer pay who request withholding for that state.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Recomputation of retired pay of certain recalled retirees (sec. 655).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 149) that would authorize the recomputation of retired pay for service members recalled to active duty during the Vietnam war based on the rates of basic pay in effect at the time of their subsequent release from active duty.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Delay of effective date for fee for veterinary services (sec. 656).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 613) that would delay for one year, until October 1, 1985, the effective date for a $10 per visit fee for pets of military personnel provided care by military veterinarians. The Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1984 (Public Law 98-94) had provided for the fee to take effect on October 1, 1984.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Legislative provisions not adopted

Clarification of tax treatment of certain allowances.—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 160c) that would provide, for purposes of the tax benefit rule of section 265(1) of the Internal Revenue Code, that military housing and subsistence allowances and ministers' parsonage allowances not be considered as exempt from the Federal income tax.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The conferees are deeply troubled by the prospect of an Internal Revenue Service ruling that would treat military housing allowances in such a manner as to disallow military homeowners' itemized deductions of mortgage interest and real property taxes on their Federal income tax returns. The specter of such a ruling has created substantial anxiety within the armed forces.

The Congress has consistently considered the tax advantage that accrues to military allowances in defining and setting military compensation levels. (See section 101(25) of title 37, United States Code.) If the tax advantage component of military compensation were to be neutralized by a change in current tax practice, then it would be necessary to adjust the other components of military compensation accordingly. The conferees believe that the better course would be to preserve the current tax practice.

In the interest of setting the concerns of service members to rest, the conferees were sorely tempted to retain section 160c of the Senate amendment. Unfortunately, inclusion of the provision in the conference report might be ruled to violate the rules of the House of Representatives by including a tax measure in legislation not reported by the Committee on Ways and Means. Consequently, the conferees reluctantly agreed to drop the provision.

The Senate recedes.

Sense of Congress regarding restrictions on cost-of-living adjustments for certain retired persons under 62 years of age.—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1019) that would express the sense of the Congress that the provision of the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1982 (Public Law 97-253) restricting cost-of-living adjustments for Federal retirees under age 62 should not be extended beyond fiscal year 1985.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes. The House version of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 (H.R. 4170) would have extended the restrictions on cost-of-living adjustments into fiscal years 1986 and 1987. That provision, however, was deleted in conference report.

TITLE VII—EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

NEW EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Title VII of the House bill would establish a new educational assistance program for members of the armed forces. The basic benefit, funded by the Veterans Administration, would accrue at the rate of $300 per month with a maximum of 36 months of entitlement for military personnel who serve for three years on active duty or for two years on active duty and four years in the selected reserve. The Secretary of Defense would have discretion to increase the basic benefit by up to an additional $400 per month for individuals in critical or difficult-to-recruit-for skills.

The House provision would authorize a supplemental benefit of $300 per month at the discretion of the Secretary of Defense for service members who complete the initial period of service required for the basic benefit and serve an additional five years on active duty or an additional two years on active duty and four years in the selected reserve. In addition, the Secretary of Defense would have discretion to increase the supplemental benefit by up to an additional $300 per month on a targeted basis.

A service member in a critical skill would be allowed, at the discretion of the Secretary of Defense, to transfer benefits to dependents after completing ten years of active duty service.

Title VII of the House bill would also establish an educational assistance program for members of the selected reserve. Selected reservists would receive an entitlement of $140 per month for up to 36 months, funded by the Department of Defense, in exchange for a six-year commitment in the selected reserve.

The House provision would require that the Department of Defense portion of the new educational assistance program be budgeted on an accrual basis. All benefits, with the exception of the basic entitlement, would be funded by the Department of Defense.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 160b) that would authorize a four-year test program of educational assistance in which a maximum of 12,500 personnel each year could participate. The new educational assistance program would be limited to non-prior service personnel who enlist after September 30, 1984, and before September 30, 1988, for active duty for two years and who agree to serve during that enlistment in a military skill designated by the Secretary concerned. During their two years of service, participants in the test program would have their basic pay reduced by $250 per month. In addition, they would receive neither basic allowance for quarters nor basic allowance for subsistence. In exchange, the individual would be eligible for educational benefits of $500 per month for a total of 36 months.

If an individual elected to reenlist, he would be eligible to retain the educational entitlement or to relinquish that entitlement and instead receive the pay and allowances foregone during the two-year enlistment period. This test program would be funded by the Department of Defense and would be administered by the Veterans Administration.

The Senate amendment also contained a provision (sec. 155) that would repeal the December 31, 1989, termination date for use of educational benefits under the Vietnam-era educational assistance program. The Department of Defense would pay the cost of all benefits used after that date.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with amendments establishing a three-year educational benefits program. In exchange for a reduction in basic pay of $100 per month for 12 months, new recruits entering military service after June 30, 1985, and before July 1, 1988, would accrue an educational benefit of $300 per month for 36 months of active duty. Those serving for two years of active duty would accrue an educational benefit of $250 per month for 36 months. New entrants would be covered by this program unless they elected not to participate at the time they entered the service. Discretionary kickers and supplemental benefits would be identical to those provided in the House bill.

The conferees agreed to eliminate transferability to dependents but direct the Secretary of Defense to provide the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives with a report on the need for and feasibility of transferring benefits to a spouse or dependent children.

As provided in the House bill, selected reservists would receive an entitlement of $140 per month for up to 36 months, in exchange for a six-year enlistment.

The basic $300 per month benefit would be funded by the Veterans Administration, with Department of Defense funding for all kickers, supplemental benefits, and the reserve program. Authority for persons to elect to participate in the current Veterans' Educational Assistance Program (VEAP) would be suspended during the three-year program.

With respect to the 1989 termination date, individuals with an entitlement to benefits under the Vietnam-era educational assistance program could, if they elected to do so, accrue a new entitlement to $300 per month for 36 months after three additional years of active duty service with no reduction in basic pay. In addition to this basic benefit, they would be eligible to receive one-half of their educational entitlement under the Vietnam-era G.I. bill (Chapter 34 of Title 38).

EXISTING PROGRAMS

Legislative provision adopted

Extension of pilot Department of Defense educational assistance loan repayment program (sec. 709).—The Defense Authorization Act of fiscal year 1981 (Public Law 96-342), authorized a test program in which a portion of Higher Education Act loans would be forgiven for individuals who enlist in the armed forces. The authority for this program expires on September 30, 1984.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 604) that would extend the authority for this program for two additional years until September 30, 1986.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

TITLE VIII—CIVIL DEFENSE

The President's budget request included $252.478 million for civil defense. The House bill (sec. 901) would authorize $190 million. The Senate amendment (sec. 181) would authorize $190.478 million.

The Senate recedes.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment included language that would repeal the limits on appropriations for emergency management assistance contributions that may be provided to the states for personnel and administrative expenses associated with civil defense and for certain other purposes.

The Senate recedes.

TITLE IX—NATIONAL DEFENSE STOCKPILE

PROVISIONS RELATED TO NATIONAL DEFENSE STOCKPILE

Legislative provisions adopted

The House bill contained a number of provisions affecting the national defense stockpile. Current authorization to dispose of material from the stockpile would be terminated on September 30, 1984 (sec. 901). Authorization for disposal of specific quantities of 19 materials (including 10 million troy ounces of silver) currently in excess of stockpile requirements would be provided, effective October 1, 1984 (sec. 902). The limit on the unobligated balance authorized for the National Defense Stockpile Transaction Fund would be reduced from $500 million to $25 million (sec. 903). Finally, the President would be required to submit a report, not later than January 31, 1985, on a number of issues related to stockpile operation and management.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provisions.

The Senate recedes with amendments reducing the quantities authorized for disposal of two materials and increasing the quantity of one material and authorizing a limit of $250 million for the unobligated balance for the Stockpile Transaction Fund during fiscal years 1985 and 1986 and $100 million thereafter.

In establishing this limitation on Transaction Fund balances the conferees agreed that the balance limitation should be reviewed and adjusted to allow efficient stockpile management as revenues to the Fund increase or decrease. The conferees intend that no reduction in stockpile goals be implemented during fiscal year 1985.

It is the intent of the conferees that the disposal of silver authorized by this Act be deferred until the President submits the report required by section 788 of Public Law 97-114, the Department of Defense Appropriation Act for fiscal year 1982.

The Senate amendment contained a related provision (sec. 1012) that would require 30 percent of net proceeds derived from the Naval Petroleum Reserves during fiscal year 1985 to be credited to the Stockpile Transaction Fund and authorizes $223,804,000 for exploration, prospecting, conservation, development, use and operation of the Naval Petroleum Reserves.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment deleting the authorization for exploration, prospecting, conservation, development, use and operation of the naval petroleum reserves.

Legislative provisions not adopted

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1020) that would require that silver disposed of from the stockpile be used by the Secretary of the Treasury to mint coins.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

Legislative jurisdiction to authorize the minting of coins does not reside with the Committees on Armed Services and a provision of this nature could be ruled to be nongermane to the House bill. Therefore, the Senate recedes.

TITLE X—MATTERS RELATING TO NATO AND OTHER ALLIES

Legislative provisions adopted

Sense of Congress concerning expenditures by U.S. allies (sec. 1001).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1021) that would express the sense of Congress that the President should insist that the NATO allies increase their defense spending by at least 3 percent in real terms and that Japan should further increase its defense spending.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1124) that would express the sense of Congress that the President should call on our NATO allies to increase their defense spending by at least 3 percent in real terms and should call on Japan to further increase its defense spending.

The Senate recedes.

NATO conventional capability (sec. 1002).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1048) that would express the congressional finding that the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) should improve its conventional defense capability and urge the President and Secretary of Defense to continue to encourage NATO members to fulfill certain conventional force improvement commitments.

Also, section 1048 would impose a ceiling of 326,414 on the number of U.S. military personnel stationed ashore in NATO Europe and require 2 annual reports by the Secretary of Defense on allied progress in meeting their commitments and U.S. expenditures in support of NATO.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with technical amendments.

Although the House conferees share the desires of the Senate conferees to see NATO's conventional capabilities improved and greater allied support for the alliance, the House conferees are concerned about the impact of the Senate provision on NATO. Specifically, the House conferees are concerned about the effect of the Senate provision on the political cohesion of the alliance; the effect of a manpower ceiling on the Supreme Allied Commander's planning and operational flexibility and the impact of a congressionally imposed manpower ceiling on the Mutual and Balanced Force reduction negotiations in Vienna, Austria.

The House Committee on Armed Services, therefore, intends to hold hearings in the next session on the impact of the Senate provision, on NATO's capabilities.

Report on allied contributions to common defense (sec. 1003).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 10001) that would require an annual report by the Secretary of Defense on the defense contributions of our NATO allies and Japan.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

NATO Seasparrow Program (sec. 1004).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1002) that would authorize the Secretary of the Navy to continue participation in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization SEASPARROW Surface Missile System Cooperative Consortium under the terms of existing Memorandum of Understanding.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Procurement of communications support and related supplies and services (sec. 1005).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1007) that would provide authority to the Secretary of Defense to enter into arrangements with allied countries to exchange communication support and related supplies and services.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Armaments cooperation with NATO nations (sec. 1006).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1034) that would require the Secretary of Defense to prepare and transmit to the Congress, not later than December 1, 1984, a report setting forth a comprehensive plan by which the United States and NATO member countries may achieve the objectives of section 1122(b) of Public Law 97-252, Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1983. Section 1122(b) expresses a sense of Congress that the President should propose that the NATO allies join United States in agreeing relative to the following:

(1) to coordinate more effectively their defense efforts and resources to create, at acceptable costs, a credible, collective, conventional force for the defense of the North Atlantic Treaty area;

(2) to establish a cooperative defense-industrial effort within Western Europe and between Western Europe and North America that would increase the efficiency and effectiveness of NATO expenditures by providing a larger production base while eliminating unnecessary duplication of defense-industrial efforts; and

(3) to share more equitably and efficiently the financial burdens, as well as the economic benefits (including jobs, technology, and trade) of NATO defense.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed on the need for the report required by the Senate amendment. However, in the recognition that the course of action offered in the report would be only a U.S. proposal and not a plan agreed to by NATO, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to submit only a proposal. The conferees also extended the date by which the report should be submitted to May 1, 1985.

The House recedes.

TITLE XI—MATTERS RELATING TO ARMS CONTROL

Legislative provisions adopted

Report on strategic nuclear submarine force (sec. 1101).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1108) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to submit a report on the survivability of the United States strategic nuclear ballistic missile submarine force and the supporting command, control and communications systems not later than January 19, 1985.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed to a provision directing the Secretary of Defense to submit a study on the survivability of the strategic ballistic missile submarine force not later than April 1, 1985.

The Senate recedes with an amendment.

Annual report on strateigc defense programs (sec. 1102).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1109) that would require that annually, from fiscal year 1986 through fiscal year 1990, the Department of Defense submit separate justification books covering the Strategic Defense Initiative and other strategic defense programs, detailing the funding plans for the previous fiscal year, the current fiscal year, and the following two fiscal years.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1024) that called for annual funding reports in the same fiscal years and covering the same fiscal years as required by the House provision, but only on the Strategic Defense Initiative. It also specifically called for the reports to detail component programs, define objectives, to link objectives to each program, and to identify technology base efforts related to the Strategic Defense Initiative.

The Senate amendment contained another provision (sec. 1042) that would express the sense of the Congress that the President consult with Japan and the NATO allies about the Strateigc Defense Initiative.

The House recedes with an amendment providing that the report address strategic ballistic missile defense programs other than just the Strategic Defense Initiative, adding a requirement that the Secretary of Defense provide a statement of any anticipated impact of strategic defense programs on the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty plus information that would help Congress to review the impact of Soviet countermeasures, deleting the requirement to identify technology base efforts, and amalgamating the language on consultation with the allies into a single provision on strategic missile defense.

Report on theater nuclear weapons and force structure (sec. 1103).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1115) requiring the President to submit a report to the Congress no later than January 19, 1985, setting forth reasons why the United States should or should not initiate a long term program for renovation of the NATO nuclear deterrent in a manner designed to reduce pressures for the early first use of tactical nuclear weapons and to substantially reduce NATO's theater nuclear arsenal. The report required by this provision of the House bill must consider the:

possible elimination of NATO's reliance on short-range nuclear weapons such as the atomic demolition munitions, and the 155-millimeter and 8-inch nuclear artillery round;

possible deployment of longer range nuclear weapon launchers capable of attacking Warsaw Pact targets but not those targets located in the Soviet Union; elimination of NATO's inventory of dual-capable nuclear/conventional weapons; and placement of control and operation of tactical nuclear weapons in a single NATO command.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Report on withdrawal of tactical nuclear warheads from Europe (sec. 1104).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1116) requiring the President to submit a report to the Congress no later than 90 days after a final decision is made by the NATO Alliance regarding reductions to be made by the United States in the numbers of tactical nuclear warheads located within NATO European member nations, pursuant to a decision made on October 17, 1983, by the Nuclear Planning Group of NATO. The report would be required to contain:

types and numbers of warheads to be withdrawn, the withdrawal schedule, and the rationale for warhead withdrawals; and any changes in force structure to be made resulting from changes in tactical nuclear warheads positioned in Europe.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Report on U.S. counterforce capability (sec. 1105).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1127) requiring the President to submit a report to the Congress no later than January 19, 1985, discussing the required strategic counterforce capability consistent with existing United States policy as expressed by the President in his letter of May 11, 1983, to Members of the House of Representatives. The President's report would be required to consider current and proposed U.S. ICBM's such as the MX and Trident II (D-5) missiles and the small single-warhead missile planned for procurement for modernization of strategic forces. The President would also be required to provide the rationale for the counterforce capability that would be identified as a result of those procurements. In addition, the President would be required to include in the report a "specific definition" of what U.S. counterforce capability would constitute a so-called "first strike capability" against the Soviet Union.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment inserting a requirement for an assessment of corresponding Soviet counterforce and first strike capabilities, and deleting the descriptive language of the President's policy.

Report on policy implications of a "nuclear winter" study (sec. 1107).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1136) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to participate in any comprehensive study conducted on the atmospheric, climatic, environmental, and biological consequences of nuclear war and the implications that such consequences have for the nuclear weapons strategy and policy, arms control policy and civil defense policy of the United States. This provision would require the Secretary of Defense to submit a comprehensive report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 1013) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to conduct a comprehensive study on the consequences of nuclear war and the implications that such consequences have for the nuclear weapons strategy and policy, arms control policy, and the civil defense policy of the United States. The major difference between the two versions was that the House bill would authorize the Secretary to participate in any such study carried out by an agency of the Federal government while the Senate amendment would direct the Secretary of Defense to conduct the study.

The conferees recommend a compromise which adopts the Senate language with the exception that the Secretary of Defense would participate in any comprehensive study of these matters rather than to conduct the study.

The House recedes with an amendment.

Sense of the Congress relating to establishing nuclear risk reduction centers in the United States and the Soviet Union (sec. 1108).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1033) wherein the Senate would commend the President for his announced support of certain confidence building measures between the United States and the Soviet Union and his initiation of negotiations on those measures. The Senate provision would also urge the President to add to those negotiations the subject of establishing nuclear risk reduction centers to be located in the United States and in the Soviet Union to be operated under the direction of appropriate diplomatic and defense authorities.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Sense of Congress regarding a report to the Congress on certain verification programs (sec. 1109).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1035) that would express the sense of the Congress that the President should submit a report to the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Select Committee on Intelligence of the Senate and to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives identifying and evaluating programs to support verification requirements to determine compliance with the 1972 Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention and a chemical weapons ban. In addition, the requested report would identify the budget resources necessary to support verification requirements necessary to determine compliance with the 1972 Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention and a chemical weapons ban. The President would be requested to submit this report not later than December 31, 1984.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment.

Sense of the Congress on interim constraints and on support for United States to pursue outstanding arms control compliance (sec. 1110).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1039) that would express the sense of Congress that: (a) the United States should pursue with the Soviet Union the resolution of concerns over compliance with existing arms control agreements and should seek corrective actions through diplomatic channels; (b) the United States should continue its policy to refrain from undercutting the provisions of existing strategic arms agreements so long as the Soviet Union does so through December 31, 1985, or until a new strategic arms agreement is concluded; (c) the President provide a report by September 15, 1984, to the Congress reflecting additional findings regarding Soviet adherence to a "no-undercut policy"; (d) the President, on or before June 1, 1985, report to the Congress on the implications of the U.S.S. Alaska's sea trials, possible Soviet responses to the termination of the U.S. "no-undercut policy", a review of Soviet activities with respect to existing strategic arms agreements and recommendations regarding the future restraint policy of the United States; and (e) that the President should consider the impact of any changes to current policy regarding existing strategic arms agreements and consult with the Congress before making any changes in current policy.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment extending the date of the September 15, 1984, report to February 1, 1985.

Policy on the status of certain treaties to limit nuclear testing (sec. 1111).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1047) that would express the sense of the Congress that the President should at the earliest possible date request the advice and consent of the Senate to the ratification of the Threshold Test Ban and peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaties signed in 1974 and 1976, repectively. The President's request to the Senate would be accompanied by a report containing any plans the President may have to negotiate supplemental verification procedures and any understandings or reservations on the subject of verification that the President believes necessary to be attached to the Threshold Test Ban and Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaties. Also, the Senate provision would urge the President to resume negotiations toward a "verifiable comprehensive test ban treaty."

In addition, Sec. 1047 of the Senate amendment would express the sense of the Congress that "in accordance with international law, the United States shall have no obligation to comply with any bilateral arms control agreement with the Soviet Union that the Soviet Union is violating."

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would change the provisions to a "sense of the Senate" in lieu of a "sense of the Congress" provision.

Legislative provisions not adopted

Sea-launched cruise missiles (SLCM).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1130) that would prohibit deployment of nuclear sea-launched cruise missiles until the President submits a report describing a verification method that the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Director of Central Intelligence have certified would be adequate, and that would be acceptable if used by another nation, to verify whether a deployed cruise missile is armed with a conventional or nuclear warhead. The provision would be in effect until September 30, 1985, or until the President submits a report to Congress setting forth (a) findings that, after January 1, 1983, the Soviet Union has deployed a cruise missile comparable to Tomahawk and (b) findings that it is technically impossible to verify effectively numbers of deployed SLCMs through national technical means of verification. The President would be required to submit a report on nuclear-armed sea-launched cruise missile verification methods no later than January 19, 1985.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1038) citing several findings of the Congress concerning U.S. arms control efforts and the deployment of sea-launched cruise missiles by the Soviet Union. The provision further expressed the Sense of Congress that the President should, at the earliest practicable time, urge the Soviet Union to return to the START and INF negotiations and to include in the appropriate negotiations a discussion of verification means for nuclear armed sea-launched cruise missiles with a view toward achieving the complete elimination of all Soviet and U.S. nuclear weapons. The provision also urged the President to advise the government of the Soviet Union that the United States is willing to accept, and that the Soviet Union should be willing to accept, "those intrusive on-site inspection procedures necessary for effective verification as an integral part of mutual arms reductions."

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees note the existence of a sharp division in the approaches taken to the arms control problems posed by the deployment of nuclear-capable sea-launched cruise missiles on naval submarines and surface ships.

In view of the deployment of nuclear-armed sea-launched cruise missiles by the Soviet Union since 1962, and the absence of existing reliable means whereby the presence (or absence), range, warhead or capabilities of sea-launched cruise missiles can be verified, the conferees do not believe that a moratorium on the deployment of nuclear-armed Tomahawk sea-launched cruise missiles would be consistent with the national security interest of the United States.

The conferees support an early resumption of the Strategic Arms Reduction Talks (START) and the Intermediate Range Nuclear Force (INF) negotiations, and urge the Soviet Union to drop its preconditions to the resumption of these important negotiations. The conferees believe that discussions on limitations of nuclear sea-launched cruise missiles should be included in the appropriate negotiations. However, the conferees recognize that the characteristics of sea-launched cruise missiles would seriously complicate the negotiation of effective verification of such limitations. The United States is, and the conferees believe that the Soviet Union should be, willing to accept those intrusive on-site inspection procedures necessary for effective verification as an integral part of mutual and verifiable arms reductions. Therefore, the conferees urge that means whereby limitations on sea-launched cruise missiles could be effectively verified be pursued as a matter of the highest priority, and direct that the Congress be fully informed about the status of programs in this regard.

Toward this end, the conferees direct the President to submit a report to the Congress by March 15, 1985, that will:

(1) describe an arms control method by which it would be possible to determine whether a cruise missile designed to be launched from a naval vessel is conventionally armed or nuclear armed and by which it would be possible to effectively verify an arms control limitation on the number of cruise missiles that are armed with nuclear warheads and deployed on naval vessels; and

(2) state whether the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Director of Central Intelligence have agreed that the method described would be a high-confidence method as applied by the United States to cruise missiles of another nation and would be an acceptable method for use when applied by another nation to cruise missiles of the United States.

Sense of the Senate resolution regarding a superpower summit.—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1043), that would express the sense of the Senate that the President of the United States and the President of the Soviet Union should meet at the earliest practical time following thorough preparation to discuss major issues involving U.S. and Soviet relations and to work for the realization of mutual, equitable, and verifiable reductions in nuclear arms.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

TITLE XII—PROCUREMENT POLICY REFORM AND OTHER PROCUREMENT MATTERS

PART A—SHORT TITLE AND CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS

Legislative provisions adopted

Congressional findings and policy (sec. 1202).—The House bill contained a statement (sec. 802) indicating that the Congress believes that excessive payments for spare parts by the Department of Defense has undermined the public confidence in the defense procurement process, and enunciating certain policies to ensure that spare parts are procured in an efficient and cost-effective manner. The section would direct the Secretary of Defense to take certain actions to improve contracting procedures.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees discussed at length the impact that the recent examples of excessive payments for common items have had on every aspect of the congressional consideration of the defense budget, the process for acquisition of supplies by the Department of Defense, and the management of Department of Defense in general. The recurrence of seemingly inexplicable occurrences such as these mandate legislative attention. While acknowledging the recent initiatives undertaken by the Department of Defense, only legislation will ensure that the recent initiatives will result in systemic changes.

The conferees intend to continue to examine and review the Department of Defense procurement process and the department's implementation of the provisions of this act. The department is further directed to examine the findings and recommendations of the Armed Services Committees of the House of Representatives and the Senate in their respective reports accompanying the procurement provisions reported by the committees. (H. Rpt. 98-690 and S. Rpt. 98-500).

PART B—AMENDMENTS TO CHAPTER 137 OF TITLE 10, UNITED STATES CODE

Definitions (sec. 1211).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 806) defining the terms "technical data", "unlimited rights", and "developed at private expense".

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1996) defining "component", "major procurement center", "major system", and "technical data".

The House recedes with an amendment to the Senate definition of "technical data" and deletion of the definitions for "major procurement center" and "component".

Publication of proposed regulations (sec. 1212).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 811) that would require publication of proposed procurement regulations.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 198).

The Senate recedes with an amendment clarifying that the requirement to publish such regulations for public comment applies only to regulations, policies, procedures, or forms that have a significant effect beyond the internal operating procedures of the Department of Defense or that have significant cost or administrative impact on contractors.

Planning for future competition (sec. 1213).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 807) that would require that before the Department of Defense purchases supplies, an assessment be made to determine if the item is already in the government's supply system or is available under a standard government supply contract. In addition, the provision would require that a review of the procurement history for an item be conducted and a description of the item be available so that the buyer will know what is being purchased and what price had been paid for the item previously.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed to retain the House provision requiring the Department of Defense to determine if supplies are available on a timely and cost-effective basis through the supply system or from standard government contracts before ordering from a contractor, and to require a review of the procurement history of an item.

The Senate recedes.

In addition, the provision in the House bill would require the Secretary of Defense to issue regulations requiring, in appropriate cases, that offerors furnish information in their proposals identifying those items for which unlimited rights to use technical data will not be provided the United states and that the Department of Defense considers such information when awarding the contract.

The Senate amendment contained a similar but more extensive provision (sec. 199a).

In evaluating the two provisions, the conferees agreed that one of the keys to solving the problem of excessively priced spare parts is to ensure that the United States will be able to reprocure such items competitively. A significant constraint on the government's ability to buy such parts competitively occurs because of restrictions on the government's right to release the technical data that would allow other companies to manufacture an item. Too often in the acquisition planning stages, because of funding constraints or other competing interests, the capability to purchase replenishment items from multiple sources is not given adequate consideration.

The conferees also agreed that the proliferation of parts in the supply system and the use of nonstandard items when a standard or commercial item is technically acceptable are not conducive to restraining government costs. Accordingly, the conferees direct that consideration should be given to requiring in solicitations for development of major systems a requirement that offerors identify in their proposals their ability to incorporate standard or commercially available items in the design of the system and to evaluate the cost impact of that proposal.

To ensure that use of such criteria does not adversely impact the government's ability to secure the best technology available, the conference provision states that these proposals only be considered in evaluating the cost to the government if the offer were accepted.

The conferees agreed to require the Secretary of Defense to ensure that in preparing a solicitation for the award of a contract for a major system, the agency consider requiring the offeror to identify a plan for obtaining items procured in connection with the system on a competitive basis. The plan may include proposals to provide the government unlimited rights to use technical data relating to the items, or any other alternative method to ensure the government is not restricted to one source for future acquisitions. The offeror's proposal would then be considered in the agency's evaluation of the offeror's price.

The House recedes with an amendment incorporating the agreement of conferees as specified above.

Delegation of certain procurement functions (sec. 1214).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1120) tnat would allow the head of the procuring activity to delegate the authority to approve sole source contracts to a general or flag officer or senior civilian employee in the grade GS-16 or above.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment allowing delegation of such authority to the head of the contracting office as well.

Improved procurement procedures (Sec. 1216)—Advocates for competition.—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 809) that would require the designation of a person as the "competition advocate" for an agency, as well as for each procuring activity within the agency. The House provision would specify the responsibilities and functions of the competition advocate and would also require an annual report (sec. 810) on the activities of the competition advocate.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 195) that would require the designation of a competition advocate general for each military department. The competition advocate for the military departments must be designated for a term of at least two years and would need to hold a grade of major general or rear admiral and for NASA, a grade of GS-16 or higher. In addition, the provision in the Senate amendment would require a review by the agency competition advocate of all proposed sole source contracts in excess of $100,000 and would require an annual report from the competition advocate to the Secretary of Defense and the Congress.

The conferees agreed to require the designation of an advocate for competition who holds at least a grade of GS-16, or a general or flag officer as appropriate, for each military department. In addition, each service advocate for competition would be required to submit a report to the Secretary of Defense describing his or her activities during the previous years. The report would be transmitted to Congress with the annual report of the Secretary of Defense required by section 21 of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act. Provisions in both the House bill and the Senate amendment that duplicate the requirements established in the Competition in Contracting Act, Public Law 98-369, were deleted.

The House recedes with an amendment.

Encouragement of new competitors.—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 812) that would preclude the Department of Defense from refusing to consider an offer for a contract because the offeror was not on a list of qualified bidders or its product was not on an approved list of sources.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 199) that would require the Department of Defense (1) to prepare a written justification for any prequalification requirement; (2) to specify in writing the standards that the prospective offeror or its product must meet; (3) to prepare an estimate of the cost of any required testing; (4) to provide a prospective offeror a prompt opportunity to meet the standards established for qualification; (5) to provide the reasons for a prospective offeror's failure to meet the standards; of a product; (6) to publish periodically a notice in the Commerce Business Daily soliciting new sources if there are fewer than two actual manufacturers of a product; (7) to pay for the testing of any subsequently approved product of a small business if it would result in future cost savings to the government; and (8) to review any qualification requirement within seven years after the establishment or enforcement of such requirement.

The conferees are concerned that qualification requirements, including source approval requirements, and particularly those that require a demonstration that the product or a prospective contractor have met the requirement prior to contract award, are used in some cases to inappropriately restrict competition. However, the conferees are equally concerned that the emphasis on securing more competition not result in a degradation of product quality, reliability or maintainability.

The House recedes with an amendment providing that the requirement for the establishment of written standards for qualification and the other requirements of subsection (b) apply only to qualified products lists, qualified manufacturers' lists or qualified bidders' lists, and to any qualification requirement established after the effective date of this provision.

The House amendment would also preclude the Department of Defense from denying an offeror the opportunity to submit and have its bid considered solely because the potential offeror was not on a qualified bidders' list, qualified manufacturers' list or qualified products list, if the potential offeror can demonstrate before the date of contract award that it meets the prescribed standards. This provision specifically states that it does not require referral to the Small Business Administration of an agency's decision that an offeror has not met the qualification requirement.

For all qualification requirements other than qualified bidders' lists, qualified manufacturers' lists and qualified products lists, the amendment would authorize the head of the purchasing office to waive the requirement that the agency specify in writing all requirements that must be satisfied by a potential offeror for a renewable two-year period if the head of the purchasing office, after review by the appropriate competition advocate, determines that it is unreasonable, because of cost, inability to acquire, or other circumstances, to specify the standards for qualification that a prospective offeror or its product must satisfy.

Rights in technical data.—The House bill contained two provisions (secs. 808, 812) addressing the issue of rights in technical data. One provision stated the situations in which the government would acquire unlimited rights in technical data, required the contractor to warrant that the data it provided was complete and accurate, would provide that the government may ignore, correct or cancel any improper restriction on the release of data if the contractor failed to satisfactorily substantiate the propriety of the restriction, and would require the Secretary of Defense to prescribe regulations for determining whether a defense contract would contain a time limit (not to exceed seven years) on a contractor's right to limit the government's use of technical data.

An additional provision in the House bill would require the Secretary of Defense to prescribe by regulation what constitutes the legitimate proprietary interest of a contractor in technical data. In prescribing such regulations, the Secretary of Defense would be directed to give consideration to the statement and objectives of numerous statutes relating to Small Business where appropriate, on the placement of a time limit on the right of a company to limit release of technical data developed at private expense, or in whole or in part with Federal funds, requiring a contractor to include in development and production contracts provisions pertaining to technical data, and directing the department to establish programs to provide domestic concerns an opportunity to purchase or borrow parts for design replication.

The Senate amendment contained similar provisions except with respect to the delineation of the situations in which the government acquired unlimited rights in technical data and the proscription of a time limit on the contractor's ability to restrict use of technical data.

The House recedes with an amendment.

The conferees aknowledge that legislation which would accommodate in every case of the government's interest in being able to use contractors' technical data to allow other potential competitors to produce the item as well as a contractor's right to protect data relating to items or processes it developed at its own expense, is virtually impossible. The conferees believe that the direction to the Department of Defense provided in the conference amendment to prescribe regulations defining the legitimate interests of the United States and of a contractor to be implemented in the system of government-wide procurement regulations will afford the best opportunity to reach a fair and reasonable balance of these competing interests. The amendment further requires that the regulations take into consideration the policies with respect to technical data enunciated by the Congress in this and other legislation. The latter provision was intended to ensure that legislative policies otherwise enunciated are not disregarded when implementing the policies of this act.

The House amendment broadens the scope of the Senate provision which would require contracts to contain appropriate provisions relating to technical data so that the provision now applies to all items, not just major systems. The Senate provision authorizing the Secretary of Defense to establish in a solicitation or as a negotiation objective a date after which the government will acquire the right to use technical data, was amended to authorize the Secretary to establish a set period of time (not to exceed seven years) as a negotiation objective.

Validation of proprietary data restrictions.—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 808(b)) that would require a contract for the acquisition of supplies (that includes a requirement for technical data) to require the contractor to possess an approved data management system before the United States accepts any data to be delivered under the contract. It would also permit the United States to ignore, cancel or correct any restriction on the release of technical data if the contractor fails to substantiate the restriction within 60 days of a request to do so. The contractor would also be required to pay the government's costs in challenging such a restriction if the contractor's asserted restriction was not substantially justified, but the government could not assert any right to challenge such restrictions beyond the three-year period after final payment under the contract.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 199(a)).

The House recedes with an amendment specifying a procedure for both the United States and a contractor or subcontractor at any tier to equitably resolve challenges to asserted restrictions on the government's right to use technical data. The amendment would also provide for an extension of the 60-day time period for submitting information justifying the asserted restriction if good cause is shown and require the United States to pay the costs incurred by a party defending such restriction if the challenge by the government of the contractor's asserted restriction on technical data was not in good faith.

Commercial pricing for supplies.—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 812) that would preclude the Department of Defense from entering into a contract using other than competitive procedures for the purchase of spare or replacement parts having a commercial application for a price that exceeds the lowest price at which such parts are made available to the contractor's commercial customers.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 199).

The House recedes with an amendment making minor clarifying changes and establishing an effective date one year after enactment of this Act.

PART C—AMENDMENTS TO CHAPTER 141 OF TITLE 10, UNITED STATES CODE

Legislative provisions adopted

Identification of sources of supply (sec. 1231).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 804) that would require contractors to identify the actual manufacturer or producer of an item so that the Department of Defense could purchase the item directly from the manufacturer or producer and avoid the middleman where practical. In addition, the supplies would be required to be marked, in an appropriate manner, with the national stock number and the contractor's identification number.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Long-term lease and charter of aircraft and vessels (sec. 1232).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1027) that would:

(1) prohibit use of funds to indemnify any person under the terms of any contract entered into with the United States for a lease subject to authorization under section 2401 of title 10, United States Code—

(A) for any amount paid or due by any person to the United States for any liability arising under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954; or

(B) to pay any attorney fees in connection with such contract.

(2) require that, at the same time that the President submits the budget request for the Department of Defense to Congress for fiscal years 1986 and 1987, the Secretary of Defense submit a written report to the Committees on Armed Services and Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives concerning leases.

(3) prohibit obligation of funds for a lease authorized under this section that includes a termination liability in excess of 50 percent of the original purchase value of the vessel, aircraft or vehicle unless Congress has specifically provided budget authority for the obligation of 10 percent of such termination liability.

(4) require that the guidelines for leasing of ships and aircraft be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Director of the Management and Budget not later than October 31, 1984.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed to items 1, 2 and 4 of the Senate amendment.

The House recedes with an amendment.

Economic order quantities (sec. 1233).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 194) that would require an agency to procure supplies in a quantity that would result in the total cost and unit cost most advantageous to the United States and to invite contractors to state an opinion as to whether the amount requested in the government's solicitation is the most economically advantageous to the United States.

The House bill contained a policy statement in favor of economic order quantities.

The House recedes with an amendment making technical and clarifying changes only.

Additional miscellaneous procurement provisions (sec. 1234)—Prohibition of contractors limiting subcontractor sales directly to the United States.—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 805) that would require a contractor to agree, in its contract with the United States, not to enter into any agreement with a subcontractor or otherwise act to restrict the subcontractor from selling items made by the subcontractor directly to the government, unless such an agreement is authorized by law.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 197).

The Senate recedes.

Major weapon systems: contractor guarantees.—The Senate included in its bill a provision that would require warranties on weapon systems and other defense equipment. The effect of the Senate provision was to supersede Section 794 of Public Law 98-212, Department of Defense Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 1984.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment.

The House amendment contained several changes clarifying the application of the Senate amendment.

The specific changes are as follows: (1) the use of the term "other defense equipment" was deleted, though the definition of covered items was not changed; (2) the definition of "design and manufacturing requirements" was slightly modified; (3) the remedies specified in the event of a breach of warranty were modified to reflect that the choice of which remedy would be used would be elected by the Secretary of Defense or specified in the contract; (4) the second remedy was modified to indicate that the costs for which a contractor might be required to reimburse the United States would have to be reasonable; (5) the language in the Senate bill regarding negotiation of specific details of guarantees was modified to include language from the Senate committee report regarding the ability of the department to negotiate reasonable exclusions, limitations and time durations of guarantees.

The conferees discussed the matter of warranties at some length. It was the consensus of the conferees that the military departments had not implemented Section 794 of Public Law 98-212 in the manner that had been anticipated.

Specifically, the Congress anticipated that weapon system warranties would be negotiated on a case-by-case basis. Each warranty situation is unique. Different approaches will be required depending upon whether a system is expendable (such as a missile) or nonexpendable; what the logistical support capabilities of both the government and the contractor are; the extent to which the contractor has designed the system; and numerous other factors.

It has come to the attention of the conferees that the general approach of the military departments with regard to Section 794 has been to specify a warranty clause and to require that this be utilized with no adjustment in its terms. The warranty law, in the view of the conferees, was never intended to create this type of simplistic, mechanistic approach to defense contracting.

The conferees believe that Section 794 and Section 1233 of this bill provide inherent flexibility to craft appropriate guarantees on a system-by-system basis. More specifically, the conferees emphasized the importance in Subsection (g)(1), which now clearly provides DOD with the authority to negotiate reasonable exclusions, limitations and time duration on warranties.

Furthermore, the conferees discussed at length the concern that under both Section 794 and the language in the Senate bill, contractors which may have had limited responsibility in the design of a weapon system would nevertheless be called upon to guarantee the performance of that system. The House conferees believed that performance guarantees are appropriate only where a contractor had substantial design responsibility. Though this change in the statute was not agreed upon, the conferees did agree that the department should have the authority in crafting specific warranties to consider the formulation of exclusions or limitations to address situations where a contractor has not designed a system. In such situations, the conferees believe that the department could, consistent with the intent of the statute, narrow the scope of the warranty if it would be inequitable to require a warranty of all essential performance requirements because of a lack of contractor design involvement.

In addition, it has come to the attention of the conferees that virtually no waivers have been processed since Section 794 was enacted into law. The Committees on Armed Services have never intended that guarantees which are not cost-effective could be obtained. A failure to conduct cost-benefit analyses and to process waivers where cost-effective guarantees are not obtainable would defeat the legislative intent of congressional warranty initiatives. The conferees hereby direct each of the military departments to establish mechanisms for effective cost/benefit analyses of proposed weapon system guarantees.

Finally, it has come to the attention of the conferees that there is some concern about the appropriate manner of dealing with contractual changes after contract execution. It is the understanding of the conferees that if the United States takes any actions which affect the contractor's ability to comply with the terms and conditions of the contract, the contractor is entitled to an equitable adjustment of such terms and conditions to account for such act. For example, if the government would direct a change that affected the performance of a system, the conferees believe it would be necessary for the government to grant an equitable adjustment to the extent appropriate in the terms of any performance guarantee in the contract to recognize the effect of such change.

The conferees are generally concerned that there has been an inadequate effort on the part of the military departments to communicate fully with procurement personnel in the field regarding the appropriate implementation of congressional guarantee language, and its inherent flexibility.

The Department of Defense and the military departments are expected to consult with the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives prior to the adoption of new regulations on the subject of weapon system guarantees and on a continuing basis thereafter so that Congress will be fully apprised of the manner in which this law is being implemented. Such regulations should be adopted and distributed to all contracting personnel not later than January 1, 1985.

Acquisition of petroleum.—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1111) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense, for any purchase of petroleum, to waive the application of any provision of law prescribing procedures to be followed in the formation of contracts, prescribing terms and conditions to be included in contracts, or regulating the performance of contracts if the Secretary determines (1) that petroleum market conditions have adversely affected (or will in the near future adversely affect) the acquisition of petroleum by the Department of Defense, and (2) the waiver will expedite or facilitate the acquisition of petroleum for government needs. The waiver could apply to a specific contract or to classes of contracts. Such a waiver applicable to a contract for the purpose of petroleum could also be made applicable to a subcontract under that contract. The provision would also permit the Secretary to acquire petroleum by exchange of petroleum or petroleum derivatives. For purposes of the section, "petroleum" means natural or synthetic crude, blends of natural or synthetic crude and products refined from natural or synthetic crude or from such blends.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment.

The amendment would require the Secretary of Defense to notify the Congress within 10 days of the date of granting any waiver under this section. The Secretary would be required to inform the Congress of the reasons which required the waiver.

The conferees agreed that the Department of Defense should submit a report to the Armed Services Committee of the Senate and the House of Representatives not later than April 1, 1985. The report should contain an analysis of the potential types and quantities of petroleum which could be procured under the waiver authority of this section.

Shipbuilding claims.—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1102) that would certify an 18-month statute of limitation for the submission of shipbuilding claims.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

PART D—OTHER PROCUREMENT PROVISIONS

Procurement Technical Assistance Cooperative Agreement Program (sec. 1241).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1996) that would authorize the Department of Defense to provide $2 million in grant or cooperative agreement assistance to local governments or private non-profit corporations for the operating support of outreach centers. The local procurement outreach centers would assist local businesses in securing contracts with the Department of Defense.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Provision of requirements for selected acquisition report and unit cost reports (sec. 1242).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1102) that would make certain technical adjustments in SAR's and unit cost reports.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 199c).

The conferees agree to the House provision with a technical amendment specifying that there shall be a waiting period of 30 days of continuous legislative session after the submission of certain reports and for certifications before a prohibition or obligation of funds for certain program cases.

The Senate recedes with an amendment.

Duration of assignment for program managers for major programs (sec. 1243).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1135) that would provide that the normal duty assignment of persons assigned after the date of enactment as program managers of major acquisition programs be four years. In the event that the program should report cost growth of 15 percent or more in any year, the Secretary concerned would be required to convene a board to determine the factors causing the cost overrun, including errors by individuals within the military department's jurisdiction.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 199d) that would set a statutory tour of four years or completion of a major program milestone for managers of major systems, that would set a statutory tour of four years for the commanders of each of the services' major procurement commands, and that would permit the service Secretaries to waive those tour lengths in unusual or unforeseen circumstances.

The House recedes with an amendment deleting the subsection of the Senate amendment that would set a statutory tour of four years for the commanders of each of the services' major procurement commands.

Authority to waive compliance with certain requirements provided for in regulations relating to prices of spare parts and replacement equipment (sec. 1244).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 199(e)) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to waive the requirement for approval of purchases of spare parts whose price has increased in excess of the percentage specified in the regulations issued by the Secretary of Defense, in the case of a spare part purchased through competitive procedures.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Regulations for allocating overhead to parts to which the prime contractor has added little value (sec. 1245).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 812(e)) that would prohibit the Department of Defense from entering into a contract for the purchase of spare or replacement parts if the amount of the contract exceeds the sum of the direct costs incurred by the contractor, reasonable profit, and a share of the contractor's overhead that is directly attributable to such parts. In addition, the provision would limit the overhead that could be attributed to any spare or replacement part.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 192) that would require the Secretary of Defense to issue regulations limiting the amount of overhead that a contractor may allocate to supplies procured from a contractor who does not produce the supplies and who does not add significant value to the supplies.

The conferees found that the apparently excessive prices charged for such common items as a hammer, wrench, or diode resulted from pricing procedures that allow prices bearing no relationship to the intrinsic value of the item. Such procedures prevent government personnel from comparing prices for various items because contractor costs of providing many independent services not necessarily attributable to that item, such as engineering support, configuration control, training and quality assurance, are allocated to all the items a contractor provides, even if that contractor did not add value to the particular item.

Although the conferees do not believe legislating the manner in which parts are priced is appropriate, the conferees agree that the Department of Defense must change its pricing procedures to ensure that prices charged for spare parts reflect the item's intrinsic value. The conferees recommend that the Department of Defense review alternate pricing methods, including (1) allocation of overhead and administrative expenses according to the value of an item and (2) separate pricing of support services provided by prime contractors.

The House recedes with an amendment.

PART E—TEMPORARY PROVISIONS, REPORTS AND EFFECTIVE DATES

Legislative provisions adopted

Report on implementation of certain recommendations of the Grace Commission (sec. 1251).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1119) that would require the Department of Defense to submit a report assessing the recommendations of the President's Private Sector Survey on Cost Control (Grace Commission) related to progress payment rates and the modernization of automated data processing systems.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment extending the date within which such report is due.

Plan for Management of Technical Data and Computer Capability Improvements (sec. 1252).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 808(d) that would require the Secretary of Defense to develop a plan for an improved system for the acquisition and management of technical data to implement the plan within five years.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 199a) that would require the Secretary of Defense to establish a plan for improving the system for storing and indexing technical data. The provision would also require the Secretary of Defense to submit a plan to the Congress within 180 days of enactment of that act, detailing how he intends to improve the computer capability of the Department of Defense to store and access rapidly procurement data including, among the other items, price and procurement history.

The House recedes with an amendment to extend the 180 day period to one year.

Report on use of independent cost estimates for major defense acquisition programs (sec. 1253).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 199f) that would require the Department of Defense to submit a report to the Committees on Armed Services of the House and the Senate on the continued use of independent cost estimates in the planning, programing, budgeting and selection process for major defense acquisition programs.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Legislative provisions not adopted

Cost and pricing data.—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 193) that would reduce the threshold for requiring certified cost and pricing data (the Truth in Negotiations Act threshold) from $500,000 to $100,000.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The Congress recently passed Public Law 98-369 which included the Competition in Contracting Act of 1984. This law reduced the threshold as provided in the Senate amendment.

Limitation on small business set asides.—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 199a) that would prohibit certain Foreign Military Sales contracts and contracts with prequalification requirements from being totally or partially set aside for small business if only one small business source would be eligible to bid for the set aside.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment limiting the application of this provision to certain Foreign Military Sales procurements.

Restrictions on awards of sole source contracts.—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 812b) that would preclude the Department of Defense from soliciting an offer from only one source or from negotiating with only one source for the purchase of spare or replacement parts unless the head of the contracting activity certified that only one source was capable of producing the part or that, because of an emergency, a legitimate proprietary interest in the item or that for several other enunciated reasons a sole source contract was appropriate.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. Public Law 98-369 established very limited conditions under which sole source procurements would be permissible.

Competitive procurement of reactor components for the new attack submarine design.—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1122) that would require that the Secretary of Defense seek bids for competitive procurement of nuclear reactor components for the SSNX prototype and lead submarine from at least three vendors.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed that the Secretary of Defense should structure defense procurements, including the reactor components of the new design submarine, so as to ensure competition whenever cost effective.

The conferees further agreed that competitive procurement is clearly set out as the preferred method of procurement in current law.

The House recedes.

TITLE XIII—DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE ORGANIZATION AND MANAGEMENT MATTERS

REORGANIZATIONS

Legislative provisions adopted

Joint Chiefs of Staff reorganization (sec. 1301).— Section 1112 of the House bill would amend chapters 3, 5, 35, and 36 of title 10, United States Code, and section 101 of the National Security Act of 1947 (section 402 of title 50, United States Code), modifying the national military chain of command, and the structure of the Joint Chiefs of Staff (JCS), the Joint Staff, and the National Security Council. Specifically, the House bill would:

(1) Provide that the national military chain of command runs from the President to the Secretary of Defense and through the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to the combatant commands and that orders to the combatant commands shall be issued by the President or the Secretary through the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

(2) Provide that, subject to the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary, the Chairman supervises the commanders of the combatant commands and acts as their spokesman on operational requirements.

(3) Retain the Joint Chiefs of Staff as the principal military advisers to the President, the National Security Council, and the Secretary of Defense but make the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff responsible (a) for determining when issues under consideration by the Joint Chiefs of Staff shall be decided and (b) for providing military advice in his own right in addition to his existing responsibility to inform the Secretary of Defense and the President of those issues on which the Joint Chiefs of Staff have not agreed.

(4) Remove the existing 400-man limitation on the size of the Joint Staff.

(5) Provide that the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff would select officers to be assigned to the Joint Staff from among the most outstanding service officers.

(6) Remove the existing requirement that the tour of duty of the Director of the Joint Staff may not exceed three years and that he may not be reassigned to the Joint Staff in peacetime upon completing his tour of duty as Director.

(7) Increase the management authority of the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff by removing the restriction that he manages the Joint Staff on behalf of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

(8) Increase the current three-year limitation on service on the Joint Staff to four years and allow reassignment to the Joint Staff after two years instead of three years; with the proviso that the Secretary of Defense would be authorized to approve exceptions to these limitations.

(9) Require that, subject to guidelines established by the Secretary of Defense, each chief of a military service and each commander of a unified or specified command be given the opportunity to provide comments on any report or recommendation of the Joint Staff before its submission to the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

(10) Require the Secretary of Defense to ensure that the Joint Staff is independently organized and operated to support the Chairman and the members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in providing for the unified strategic direction of the combatant forces, for their operation under unified command, and for their integration into an effective team of land, naval, and air forces.

(11) Require the Secretary of Defense to ensure that military promotion, retention, and assignment policies give appropriate consideration to the performance of an officer as a member of the Joint Staff.

(12) Require that the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff evaluate all nominees for three- and four-star positions on the basis of their performance in joint military assignments.

(13) Add the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to the statutory membership of the National Security Council.

A bill (H.R. 3718), introduced by Representative Bill Nichols, containing identical provisions passed the House of Representatives on October 17, 1983.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provisions.

The conferees agree with the provisions in the House bill summarized above in items 3(a), 5, 6, and 11.

In accepting item 3(a), the conferees agreed to additional legislative language that would safeguard the right of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to recommend to the Chairman subjects to be added to the JCS agenda.

The conferees also agree that the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff will be responsible, subject to the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary of Defense, for acting as the spokesman of the commanders of the combatant commands on operational requirements. The provision summarized in item 2 was modified to eliminate the Chairman's supervisory role over the combatant commanders.

The conferees agree with the provision summarized in item 8 except for the proviso that would have allowed the Secretary of Defense to approve exceptions.

The conferees carefully considered all of the provisions of Nichols' bill, which was incorporated into the House version of the fiscal year 1985 Defense Department Authorization Bill. The conferees agree that the House has performed an important service in bringing JCS reform to the fore. The conferees were not able, however, to reach agreement on a comprehensive reform of the JCS. The conferees recognize and agree that the provisions to which the conference was able to agree are important, and that the issue of JCS reform and other issues, such as the restructuring of the Office of the Secretary of Defense (OSD), should remain high on the agenda of the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives. The conferees agree, therefore, that both committees will make these issues high priority during the next session of Congress.

The conferees also agree that the issue of JCS reform cannot be treated in isolation from other problems that exist in the organization and functioning of the Department of Defense. They, therefore, agree that the two committees early in the following session of Congress will address not only the problem of JCS reform, but also a broader range of organizational issues pertaining to the structure and role of the Office of the Secretary of Defense, the Military Departments, and the Unified and Specified Commands.

Both committees consider themselves fully committed to studying the issues of JCS reform and of comprehensive DOD organizational reform with the intent of enacting legislation during the next legislative year. The objectives of the effort that the House and Senate Armed Services Committees agree to make during 1985 are as follows:

to ensure that the Department of Defense is organized in a manner that results in the most effective and capable unified fighting forces with the resources available; to ensure that the senior officials in the Department, both military and civilian, can carry out their responsibilities in a logical fashion and that their relationship to one another is balanced, and does not involve unnecessary duplication;

to ensure that senior personnel in the Executive Branch and the Congress receive sound military advice that cuts across Service lines on matters of policy, planning, programming, and budgeting.

In order to assist the two committees in their ongoing consideration of DOD organizational reform, the conference requests that the following questions be answered by the indicated officials directly to the committees no later than March 1, 1985. The conferees believe that all of the issues raised in the following questions need to be carefully considered at the earliest possible time. This list of questions is representative only and is not meant to limit the scope of the committees' inquiries.

Questions for the Secretary of Defense:

1. Has the Department of Defense adequately implemented the concept of unification or can additional improvements be made?

2. In what areas would improved joint military advice be of most help to you in carrying out your responsibilities? If the Organization of the Joint Chiefs of Staff were to become more effective as the principal military agent of integration within the Department of Defense, what OSD offices could be reduced in size or eliminated?

3. Is the functional organization of OSD (i.e., manpower, research and engineering, policy) appropriate given your role as the principal integrator of the capabilities of the four Services to perform major DOD missions? Should a portion of OSD be organized along mission lines to be more supportive of your integration responsibilities? Could mission-oriented offices in OSD serve as effective spokesmen for the operational commanders on policy and resource allocation issues?

4. Is your span of control as Secretary of Defense too large and cumbersome? Are there too many assistant secretaries of defense? Are the existing responsibilities of the under and assistant secretaries of defense correctly conceived and subdivided, or would a different division of responsibilities make more sense?

5. Is the chain of command from the Commander in Chief to the United and Specified Commanders confused? Are you the commander of the Unified and Specified Commanders? Does your authority "to command" need to be clarified in statute? What is your interpretation of the role of the JCS in the chain of command based upon the provisions of DOD Directive 5100.1?

6. Is the absence of OSD review of non-nuclear contingency plans consistent with the principle of civilian control of the military? Why have you not provided for OSD review of non-nuclear contingency plans?

7. Does the Department of Defense receive sufficient guidance from the National Security Council on grand strategy, U.S. strategic interests, and U.S. worldwide commitments and their priorities?

8. Does the Department of Defense give sufficient attention to the formulation of strategy and supporting policies? If not, why not? Is there a sufficient relationship between planning and fiscal constraints?

9. Who should be responsible for developing a long-term strategy for defense research and development and procurement that capitalizes on U.S. strengths and exploits Soviet weaknesses?

10. Are planning and programming in the Department of Defense oriented too much to the unilateral perspective without sufficient attention to the coalition aspects of U.S. national security strategy? If so, why?

11. What is the proper role of OSD and its proper relationship to the Services? How can it work more effectively with the Services, while avoiding interference in specialized areas whose domain properly rests with the Services?

12. What is the proper role of the Service Secretaries and what should be their relationship to the Service Chiefs? Should consideration be given to integrating the military and civilian staffs of the respective Services? Could the staffs of the Service Secretaries be reduced substantially?

13. Does the Department of Defense suffer from inexperienced political appointees and poor continuity in its senior management positions?

14. Does the Planning, Programming, and Budgeting System give sufficient attention to execution and oversight?

Questions for the Chairman of the JCS:

1. You are the senior uniformed official of the United States and the only uniformed official in the Washington headquarters of DOD who views the problems and challenges facing the armed services from a perspective independent of Service functions and responsibilities. If you were given greater authority over the Joint Staff so that you could task it and have it report directly to you, how would this improve your capability to integrate the efforts of the four Services?

2. How can the JCS be organized so as to give the Secretary of Defense joint military advice that will reflect the full range of reasonable options available to the country?

3. If you were given a Deputy of four-star rank, second in the line of protocol, how would you make use of him to assist you in your responsibilities?

4. Is the JCS system capable of making meaningful inputs on programmatic issues? If not, why not?

5. Is the closed staff character of the JCS system justified? Why?

[The Chairman of the JCS is also requested to give answers to all of the questions asked below of the commanders of the Unified and Specified Commands and the Service Chiefs.]

Questions for the Commanders of the Unified and Specified Commands (to be answered individually):

1. Is there an imbalance between your responsibilities and accountability as an operational commander and your influence over resource decisions: If such an imbalance exists, how can the Unified and Specified Commanders have a greater input in the DOD policy, programming, and budgetary process?

2. Do you have sufficient authority during peacetime over your Service component commands to ensure that you can adequately fulfill your wartime operational responsibilities? Given that you are not in the logistical chain of command, how do you ensure that forces under your command are equipped, supplied, and trained to be capable of executing likely missions, especially those requiring joint operations?

3. Given the wide range of missions to which your command may be required to respond, is there sufficient unification of your command at subordinate levels?

4. Are provisions of JCS Publication 2, Unified Action Armed Forces (UNAAF), inconsistent with the concept of unified command? Does UNAAF overly restrict your authority over your Service component commanders? Does UNAAF create obstacles to greater and necessary unification of command?

Questions for the Service Chiefs (to be answered individually):

1. How can you as a Service Chief function effectively in your role as a member of the JCS, responsible for viewing all issues in the light of the national interest, while still being an effective leader of your Service and loyal to its particular interests?

2. Do the current procedures of the Joint Staff, which often result in prenegotiated JCS positions being forwarded to the Secretary of Defense, adequately inform him of the full range of options he should consider? Do those procedures serve the best interests of the Secretary of Defense? In what manner could the Joint Staff's operating procedures be streamlined and made less cumbersome?

3. How can the Joint Staff be made more effective? How can it be organized so as to function independently of the Services, yet still profit from the expertise and knowledge that only they can provide?

4. How can service on the Joint Staff be made more rewarding in order to attract the highest quality officers in the Services?

5. Is there unnecessary duplication of effort and layering of supervision within the headquarters of the military Departments?

Questions for the Service Secretaries (to be answered individually):

1. What is the proper role of the Service Secretaries and what should be their relationship to the Service Chiefs?

2. Should consideration be given to integrating the military and civilian staffs of the respective Services?

3. Could the staffs of the Service Secretaries be reduced substantially?

4. Concerning the roles of the Service Secretaries and the staff organization of the headquarters of the Military Departments, has there been an adherence to antedated arrangements that existed when the Military Departments were separate executive departments?

Reduction in defense headquarters staffs (sec. 1302).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 172) that would impose a ceiling equal to a 5 percent reduction from the total number of personnel requested in the fiscal year 1985 budget submission for management headquarters and management headquarters support activities. The provision would also place a ceiling of 1,696 on the total number of personnel assigned to the Office of the Secretary of Defense, which was the level requested in the fiscal year 1984 budget submission.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment limiting the reduction to 2 percent, placing a ceiling of 1,730 on personnel assigned to the Office of the Secretary of Defense as of September 30, 1985. The conference agreement also allows the Secretary of Defense to exceed the 1,730 ceiling by up to 2 percent upon providing prior written explanation and justification of any proposed increase to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives.

The conferees, while agreeing to these limits, do not wish to imply that they feel these are ideal staffing levels. They continue to be concerned that excessive staffing, even after these reductions, will be found in management headquarters and management headquarters support activities in the Office of the Secretary of Defense and the military services. The committees will continue to monitor these staffing levels and to seek justification for them.

Report on size of service secretariats (sec. 1303).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1121) that would require a report explaining the disparity in the sizes of the offices of the three service Secretariats.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Implementation of certain personnel policies (sec. 1304).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1104) that would provide, in subsection (a), that no funds appropriated to the Department of Defense could be used to comply with the Office of Personnel Management regulation referred to as Basic Installment 311 of the Federal Personnel Manual, concerning personnel suitability, personnel security, personnel investigation and suitabilty disqualification action. Subsection (b) would provide that for the purposes of employees of the Department of Defense, the authorities assigned to the Office of Personnel Management (1) under section 5.2(a) of Executive Order 10577, as amended (relating to investigation of the suitability of applicants), and (2) under Executive Order 10450 (relating to security requirements for government employees) shall be exercised by the Department of Defense.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment on subsection (a). The House recedes on subsection (b).

The amendment would limit the restriction on the use of appropriated funds to July 1, 1985. The conferees believe that by that date the National Security Decision Directive-84 study group, which is tasked with reviewing the entire Federal personnel security program, will have completed its examination and resolved the dispute between the Office of Personnel Management and the Department of Defense.

Expansion of authority for collection of debts from members of the armed forces (sec. 1305).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 154) that would expand the debt collection authority contained in section 1007 of title 37, United States Code, to apply to any member, officer or enlisted, of the armed forces. Currently, only the Army and Air Force may exercise that authority, and only with respect to enlisted members.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Increased Coast Guard membership on the Reserve Forces Policy Board (sec. 1306).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1016) that would increase the Coast Guard membership on the Reserve Forces Policy Board from one to two.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Limitation on use of funds for conducting polygraph examinations (sec. 1307).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1014) that would prohibit the use of funds appropriated pursuant to an authorization of appropriations for the purpose of implementating any revision of Department of Defense Directive 5210.48 relating to polygraph examination except for the conduct of a test program involving not more than 3,500 persons. That section would also require the Secretary of Defense to report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives on the use of polygraph examinations administered by or for the Department of Defense during fiscal year 1985, including the number of examinations, a description of the purposes and results of such examination, an explanation of the uses made of the results, and detailed reports on those cases in which more than two examinations were required to resolve discrepancies.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Legislative provisions not adopted

Limitation on defense reorganizations.—Section 1125 of the House bill would amend section 125 of title 10, United States Code, placing limitations on the realignment authorities of the Secretary of Defense contained in that section. The House bill would provide that the Secretary of Defense could not undertake any realignment action or test of such realignment action under section 125 involving the transfer, reassignment, or consolidation of a function, power, or duty of a military department to a component of the Department of Defense outside the military department without specific authorization by law. The House bill would, however, exempt realignment actions or test of such realignment actions that involved fewer than 200 military and civilian personnel positions and would not result in a change of expenditures of more than $10 million in any fiscal year.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

Although the Supreme Court's decision in INS vs. Chadha has placed into question congressional mechanisms for oversight over realignment of statutory functions, powers, or duties in the Department of Defense, the conferees could not agree on the stringent House provisions that would severely restrict the realignment authority of the Secretary of Defense.

The Senate agreed to hold hearings next year on the issue of realignments in the Department of Defense.

The House recedes.

Modification in requirements for the appointment to the Department of Defense Retirement Board of Actuaries.—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 156) that would alter the qualifications necessary for appointment to the Board of Actuaries for the military retirement fund. Presently only members of the Society of Actuaries may be appointed to the board. The Senate provision would permit the appointment of an individual who has been designated as an enrolled actuary under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

TITLE XIV—CODIFICATION OF CERTAIN RECURRING AND PERMANENT PROVISIONS OF LAW

RECURRING PROVISIONS

Legislative provisions adopted

Codification of recurring and permanent provisions of law (sec. 1401-1404).—The Senate amendment contained provisions (sections 1101 and 1103-1106) embodying a portion of the project initiated by section 1267 of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1984 (Public Law 98-94), to codify certain recurring provisions of the annual defense authorization and appropriation Acts.

Section 1101 would amend title 10, United States Code, by codifying recurring provisions relating to a number of Department of Defense activities including the operation of military commissary stores. The conferees note that commissaries exist chiefly to make groceries available to military personnel at convenient locations and reasonable prices. This has historically been viewed as an institutional benefit for members of the armed forces. The conferees recognize the importance of commissaries to the quality of life of our men and women in uniform.

Section 1103 would amend title 37, United States Code, by codifying provisions relating to pay and allowances for members of the uniformed services.

Section 1104 would amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 with respect to commissary baggers. Section 1105 would repeal current laws no longer necessary as a result of codification. Finally, section 1106 would establish a general effective date for the codifications and repeals of October 1, 1984.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment deleting the amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act and delaying the effective date one year until October 1, 1985, the day after the annual provisions for fiscal year 1985 will expire.

CLERICAL AMENDMENTS

Legislative provisions adopted

Clerical amendments to title 10, United States Code (sec. 1405).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1107) that would effect a number of technical corrections to conform title 10, United States Code, to a single coherent usage.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 1201) that included not only all of the House provisions but several additional technical corrections.

The House recedes.

TITLE XV—GENERAL PROVISIONS

PART A—DEFENSE FINANCIAL MATTERS

Transfer authority (sec. 1501).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1101) that would permit the transfer of an authorization made available in the fiscal year 1985 Defense Authorization Act to any other authorization made available in the Act only upon determination by the Secretary of Defense that such a transfer were in the national interest. The authority to transfer could only be used to provide authorization for higher priority items than the items from which authorization was transferred and could not be used to provide authorization for an item that was denied authorization by the Congress. The Secretary of Defense would be required to promptly notify the Congress of transfers. Transfer of an authorization between budget activities of a major Operation and Maintenance account could be made without regard to the above mentioned limitations. The total amount of transfers would be limited to $2 billion.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees believe that transfer authority is necessary to permit efficient operations of the Department of Defense.

The obligation or expenditure of funds by the Department of Defense for procurement, research and development or operation and maintenance is prohibited by law (section 138 of title 10, United States Code) unless such funds have been previously authorized. Transfer authority would permit the Secretary of Defense to act promptly to continue the efficient conduct of activities authorized by this Act without obtaining prior legislative authorization.

Under agreements that have evolved over the years, the Secretary of Defense has consulted with the Committees on Armed Services and Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives about realignments of defense programs subsequent to the enactment of authorization and appropriation. This process, known as reprogramming, has worked well. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to use the transfer that would be authorized in this section pursuant to the procedures governing reprogramming.

The Senate recedes.

PART B—PROVISIONS RELATING TO SPECIFIC PROGRAMS

Legislative provisions adopted

Binary chemical weapons (sec. 1511).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1103) that would (1) prohibit funds appropriated pursuant to authorization from being obligated or expended for final assembly or production of binary chemical munitions, and (2) place a limitation on the advance procurement of components and the establishment of a production base for binary chemical munitions until the President provides a report to the Congress on the recommended actions of the chemical warfare review commission.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees agree to a modified version of the House provision establishing a chemical warfare review commission but deleted all reference to production funding.

The Senate recedes.

Restriction on the use of funds for the B-1B bomber program (sec. 1512).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1009) that would prohibit the use of any funds authorized to be appropriated for any activity having as its objective research, design, demonstration, development, or procurement of more than 100 B-1B bomber aircraft, including any derivative or modified version of such aircraft, unless the Secretary of Defense has notified the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives of the specific purpose for which the funds are proposed to be used and the amount proposed to be expended for such purpose.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would limit the application of this provision to fiscal year 1985.

Configuration of FFG-7 (sec. 1513).—The Senate amendment included a provision (sec. 1010) that would allow the Secretary of the Navy to determine the configuration of the FFG-7 for which funds were authorized and appropriated for fiscal year 1984 to be constructed without regard to provisions of the Department of Defense Appropriation Act, 1984, relating to the design of that frigate.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

Prohibition against using funds appropriated for the advance technology bomber and the advanced cruise missile programs for any other purpose (sec. 1514).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1022) that would express the sense of Congress that the technology associated with the Advanced Technology Bomber and the Advanced Cruise Missile programs are critical to national security, that such technologies should be developed as rapidly as feasible and funded at levels authorized, and that funds appropriated for those programs should be fully utilized for such programs. The Senate amendment would also prohibit the use of funds appropriated for those programs authorized in the fiscal year 1985 Defense Authorization Act for any other purpose.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

PART C—MISCELLANEOUS DEFENSE REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

Legislative provisions adopted

Extension of time for report of the commission established by the Military Justice Act of 1983 (sec. 1521).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1050) that would extend until December 15, 1984, the date by which the advisory commission established by the Military Justice Act of 1983 shall transmit its report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives and to the committee established by Article 67(g) of the Uniform Code of Military Justice (section 867(g) of title 10, United States Code).

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Study on foreign sales and procurement of defense articles (sec. 1522).—The House bill included a provision (sec. 1114) that would direct the Secretary of Defense, in consultation with the Secretary of Commerce, to carry out a study to assess how the adequacy of the industrial base of the United States in the event of a war or national emergency is affected by procurement of foreign defense articles and foreign sales of U.S. built defense articles.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would 1) provide that the Secretary of Defense should consult with appropriate Federal agencies in the conduct of the study, and 2) describe the study in less specific terms.

Report on utilization of the Air Force's air refueling fleet (sec. 1523).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1017) that would direct the Secretary of the Air Force to submit a report to the appropriate committees of Congress, not later than January 1985, containing an analysis of the planned operational utilization of the Air Force air refueling fleet throughout the remainder of this decade. The study would be required to include air refueling requirements for the Single Integrated Operational Plan (SIOP) and a number of potential contingency operations.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes to an amendment that changes the reporting date to March 5, 1985.

Exploitation of foreign technology by the Department of Defense (sec. 1524).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1023) that would require the Secretary of Defense to report to the Congress on how the Department of Defense can benefit from the exploitation of foreign technology. This provision would prohibit the Secretary of the Army from transferring related functions until after the report has been received by the Congress.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Report on Americans unaccounted for or missing in Southeast Asia (sec. 1525).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1025) that would require a report from the President describing current efforts of the Federal government to resolve the issue of the 2,483 Americans still missing and unaccounted for in Indochina and to secure the return of the remains of any Americans who died in Indochina and whose remains have yet to be repatriated.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with technical amendments.

Report on safety in the Army (sec. 1526).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 424) that would require a report from the Secretary of the Army describing current and planned programs relating to the safety of Army personnel, including safety involved in training exercises and safety in the operation of equipment.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Study of promotion opportunities for nonphysician providers (sec. 1527).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 177) that would authorize the appointment of doctors of podiatric medicine as members of the Medical Corps of the Army and of the Navy and authorize their designation as medical officers in the Air Force. Currently, doctors of podiatric medicine are assigned to the Medical Service Corps in the Army and Navy and to the Biomedical Science Corps in the Air Force.

The Senate provision would, however, exclude doctors of podiatric medicine from the special pays provided to medical doctors.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment. The conferees recognize that the promotion opportunities for physicians are greater than the promotion opportunities for podiatrists and other non-physician providers of health care. There was concern, however, that the Senate provision would not necessarily solve this problem because it does not directly address the promotion question or the similar problems confronting other non-physician providers. The conferees, therefore, agreed to delete the provision contained in the Senate amendment and, instead, to direct the Secretary of Defense to develop a plan that will enhance the attractiveness of podiatry as a military career field and provide equitable promotion opportunities for podiatrists and other non-physician providers. In developing this plan, the department should consider the establishment of separate promotion paths for health care providers within the Medical Service Corps and Biomedical Science Corps.

A report on the plan developed by the Secretary should be submitted to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives no later than March 15, 1985. The conferees agree that if an acceptable plan is not submitted they will seriously consider adopting a provision similar to that contained in the Senate amendment during consideration of the Defense authorization bill for fiscal year 1986.

Provisions not adopted

Reports on economic impact of defense programs and the feasibility of creating an Office of Economic Conversion.—The House bill contained two related provisions, one (sec. 1117) calling for a report on the feasibility of an annual report on the employment impact of nuclear programs and the other (sec. 1118) calling for a report on the feasibility of creating an office of economic conversion in the Department of Defense.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees, however, direct the Secretary of Defense to provide two reports to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives no later than April 30, 1985.

The first report should analyze the feasibility of an annual reporting requirement on employment impact and its distribution by congressional districts of the tactical and strategic nuclear programs. The report should include the name and location, disaggregated to the congressional district level, of all contracts in excess of $5,000,000 and the type and number of jobs created, and the duration of employment of these jobs, resulting from the following programs: (1) the MX missile program; (2) the B-1 bomber program; (3) the Pershing II missile program; (4) the ground-launched, sea-launched, and air-launched cruise missile programs; (5) the Trident I missile program; (6) the Trident II missile program; (7) the Trident submarine program; and (8) the Strategic Defense Initiative and other strategic missile defense programs.

The second report should indicate the feasibility of creating an Office of Economic Conversion in the Department of Defense to provide economic readjustment assistance to communities and workers affected by the subsequent elimination of strategic and tactical nuclear weapons systems. The conferees have in mind such readjustment assistance programs as would provide the means to promote orderly economic adjustment that would (1) minimize the dislocation of workers, communities, and industries, (2) encourage conversion of technologies and managerial and worker skills developed in nuclear systems production to programs that serve the civilian sector, and (3) provide economic and social service assistance to persons affected by the readjustment.

PART D—MISCELLANEOUS DEFENSE-RELATED MATTERS

Legislative provisions adopted

Exemption from authority to induct under the Military Selective Service Act any person whose mother was killed in line of duty (sec. 1531).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1003) that would amend the Military Selective Service Act to provide that an individual would be exempt from induction if the individual's mother died in the line of duty while serving in the armed forces. The individual would also be exempt from induction while the mother was missing or held prisoner of war. Currently, such an exemption is provided where the father, brother, or sister has been killed or is missing or held prisoner.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Prohibition of unauthorized uses of Marine Corps insignia (sec. 1532).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1004) that would prohibit unauthorized promotional or commercial use of the seal, emblem, or initials of the United States Marine Corps.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Improved readiness and training of the Civil Air Patrol (CAP) (sec. 1533).—The House bill and Senate amendment contained substantively identical provisions (sec. 1106 and sec. 1015, respectively) that would expand the authority of the Secretary of the Air Force to provide equipment and services to the Civil Air Patrol (CAP).

The conferees intend that this new authority not be used to obtain the use of government facilities such as base exchanges, commissaries, clubs, and athletic facilities of agencies other than the Air Force, except under circumstances similar to those under which such facilities of the Air Force are now used.

Participation of members of the armed forces in international sports activities (sec. 1534).—Section 308 of the House bill would amend section 717 of title 10, United States Code, authorizing up to $3 million per year from funds otherwise appropriated to pay for service members' participation in international sporting events. This is the first increase since a 1955 authorization of $800,000 per year.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Instruction of foreign officers at the Uniformed Services University of the Health Sciences (sec. 1535).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1113) that would allow the Uniformed Services University of the Health Sciences to enter into agreements with foreign military medical schools for exchanges of students, with a cap of 40 on the number of foreign military medical students allowed to be attending the Uniformed Services University of the Health Sciences at any one time.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Commission on merchant marine and defense (sec. 1536).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1123) that would establish a Commission on Merchant Marine and Defense to study problems relating to transportation of cargo and personnel for national defense purposes in time of war or national emergency, the capability of the U.S. merchant marine to meet the need for such transportation, and the adequacy of the shipbuilding mobilization base of the United States. The commission would be composed of nine members, would be directed to report on its findings in 1985 and would cease to exist 90 days thereafter.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1032) that would create a commission with identical purposes but would provide for five members, with reports to be made in 1985, 1986 and 1987.

The conferees agreed that the commission should have seven members and that it should report in 1985 and 1986.

Department of Defense civilian air traffic controllers (sec. 1537).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1126) that would authorize premium pay for civilian air traffic controllers working in the Department of Defense identical to the premium pay for air traffic controllers of the Federal Aviation Administration authorized by Public Law 97-276, the Continuing Appropriation for fiscal year 1983.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Sale of ammunition for avalanche-control purposes (sec. 1538).—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1137) that would authorize the Secretary of the Army to sell ammunition to states and designated non-Federal entities for the purposes of avalanche control.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Navy Environmental Impact Statement (sec. 1539).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1031) that would require supplemental information to the Environmental Impact Statement (EIS) prepared by the Secretary of the Navy on any proposed transfer of military and civilian personnel of the Department of the Navy from Arlington County, Virginia, to the Washington Navy Yard, Washington, D.C.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would limit the scope of the supplemental statement to the EIS prepared by the Secretary of the Navy in connection with the 1981 master plan to vacate leased space.

Authorization for Secretary of Defense to transport humanitarian relief supplies to countries in Central America (sec. 1540).—Section 1045 of the Senate bill provided authority for the Secretary of Defense to transport on a space available basis, at no charge, to any country in Central America, goods and supplies which have been provided by a non-governmental source and which are intended for humanitarian assistance.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment. The conferees are aware that the President has determined that the U.S. Government should assist in supporting humanitarian relief efforts of private organizations for victims of oppression, poverty and violence, particularly the refugees and displaced persons within Central America. The conferees fully support this effort and therefore propose adoption of this provision which provides authorization for the Secretary of Defense to transport, on a non-reimbursable basis, to any country in Central America, goods and supplies which have been provided by private organizations and which are intended for humanitarian assistance. The conferees also adopted a provision prohibiting distribution of goods or supplies transported under this section to individuals, groups, or organizations engaged in military or paramilitary activity.

The conferees agreed that such transportation, utilizing Armed Services' vessels and aircraft, was a function that the Department of Defense may perform. They further agreed that all matters relating to validation of the need for transportation, collection of such relief supplies, and the coordination of the movement of such supplies to a Defense facility in the United States for shipment should remain the responsibility of the Department of State, with such assistance from other agencies as may be required.

Nothing in this section is designed to change, amend or alter the existing statutory and administrative framework established for the coordination, direction, or supervision of U.S. humanitarian assistance efforts abroad. Specifically, 22 U.S.C. Sec. 2292 authorizes the President to furnish assistance to any foreign country, or international or private voluntary organization for natural and manmade disaster relief and assistance. The relevant authority granted under this section has been delegated by Executive Order 12163 to the Director of the U.S. International Development Cooperation Agency, to be exercised in consultation with the Secretary of State. The conferees do not intend to alter the authorities and responsibilities contained in this existing framework by this section.

The House recedes with amendments.

Legislation provisions adopted

Glomar Java Sea (sec. 1541).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1029) that would express the sense of Congress that the Administration request the Secretary General of the United Nations to seek the cooperation of the Government of Vietnam in ascertaining the fate of 46 crewmen still missing from the U.S.-registered oil drilling ship Glomar Java Sea, which sank in the South China Sea on November 1, 1983.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment simplifying the text.

Sense of Congress regarding furnishing food and medical supplies to Afghanistan (sec. 1542).—The Senate bill contained a provision in section 1037 expressing the sense of Congress that the free world should provide adequate food and medical supplies to the Afghan people in the wake of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

There was no similar provision in the House bill.

The House recedes with a technical amendment that expressed the conferees position on the duration of the aid.

To reaffirm U.S. policy toward Cuba (sec. 1543).—The Senate bill contained a provision reaffirming U.S. policy toward Cuba as expressed in the resolution entitled "Joint Resolution Expressing the Determination of the United States With Respect to the Situation in Cuba" approved on October 3, 1962 [76 Stat. 697].

The House bill had no similar provision.

The conferees agreed that although the resolution remains a valid statement of such policy, it was unnecessary to repeat existing statutory language within this section.

The House recedes with an amendment to delete the restated statutory language.

Metal millform products certification (sec. 1544).—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1053) that would require the Department of Defense to certify that all metal millform products procured by the department or any of its suppliers contain no Cuban or Russian nickel.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed that a study of the national security impact of Russian and Cuban nickel in defense procurements should be conducted before legislation is considered that would ban such materials.

The House recedes with an amendment.

Legislative provisions not adopted

Sealift mobility.—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1128) that would allow up to two foreign built passenger vessels, meeting certain criteria, to operate in the coastwise trade of the United States.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate conferees were adamantly opposed to a waiver of the Jones Act trade provisions in this instance.

The House recedes.

National security considerations relating to merchant shipping.—The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1134) that would prohibit a vessel constructed under the construction differential subsidy program from operating in the coastwise trade of the United States unless the Secretary of the Navy determines that such operation would not reduce the number of militarily useful liquid bulk carriers readily available to the United States in time of war or national emergency.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

Senate conferees were adamantly opposed to the House provision.

The House recedes.

Impact aid.—The Senate amendment contained provisions (sec. 1026 and sec. 1036) that would revise and extend Public Law 81-874, the Impact Aid Maintenance and Operations Program. Specifically, the provision would extend the authorization of appropriations contained in Public Law 81-874 for both category "A" and "B" students through fiscal year 1989 at a level of $700 million with annual increases tied to the Consumer Price Index; increase the authorization level for section 2 to $30 million; clarify that section 3(d)(2)(B) payments should not be prorated; require that coterminous school districts would receive 100 percent of entitlement; and clarify the status of a provision affecting the state of Hawaii enacted in 1983 as a part of amendments to the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act (Public Law 98-211).

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees note that the decision to eliminate this provision was made in recognizing that, under the rules of the House of Representatives, the provision is not germane to the Department of Defense authorization bill. However, legislation containing nearly identical provisions is awaiting final resolution by the Congress.

The conferees are concerned that, without the impact aid program, many school districts would have to bear heavy, added costs in order to educate the dependents of military personnel stationed within their jurisdictions. The conferees, therefore, urge that expeditious action be completed on legislation to extend the authorization for impact aid so that no disruption in the availability of funding for this program occurs.

Permanent facility for the Olympic games.—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1040) that would declare that it is the sense of the Congress that the International Olympic Committee should establish a permanent facility for the Olympic games on a site that is suitable for insulating the games from the unwarranted and disruptive international politics that have plagued the games in recent years.

The House bill contained no similar provisions.

The Senate recedes.

Bull Shoals Lake—The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 1052) that would prohibit the General Services Administration or the Bureau of Land Management from disposing of lands in the vicinity of Bull Shoals Lake, Arkansas, that have been declared excess to Department of the Army needs and retain them under the administration of the Corps of Engineers.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

TITLE XVI—DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY NATIONAL SECURITY PROGRAMS

The House Committee on Armed Services incorporated its action on the fiscal year 1985 budget request for Department of Energy National Security Programs into H.R. 5395 which was reported on April 26, 1984 (H. Rept. 98-724). H.R. 5395 would authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1985 in the total amount of $7,436,651,000, a reduction of $348,924,000 below the requested amount of $7,785,575,000. H.R. 5395 has not been considered by the House.

The Senate incorporated its action on the fiscal year 1985 request for Department of Energy National Security programs into S. 2723. The text of S. 2723 regarding Department of Energy National Security Programs, as amended, was included as Title III in the Senate amendments to H.R. 5167. The Senate amendments would authorize appropriations in the total amount of $7,323,775,000, a reduction of $461,800,000 from the $7,785,575,000 request.

Because an appropriations bill for Department of Energy National Security Programs for fiscal year 1985 has already been enacted, the conferees recommend the adoption of authorizing legislation that closely compares with the conference report on H.R. 5653, the Energy and Water Appropriations Act, 1985 (H. Rept. 98-866). The authorizing legislation contained in Title XVI would authorize appropriations in the total amount of $7,352,151,000, a reduction of $433,424,000 from the requested amount of $7,785,575,000. For purposes of comparison, the budget request, the House Committee on Armed Services report, the provisions of the Senate amendment to H.R. 5167, and the conference substitute are itemized in the following table.

Part A of Title XVI would provide authorizations for operating expenses, construction projects and capital equipment for Department of Energy National Security Programs.

Part B of Title XVI contains recurring general provisions that provide guidelines for the expenditure of authorized appropriations.

Part C of Title XVI contains five special provisions designated as sections 1631, 1632, 1633, 1634, and 1635.

Miscellaneous report provisions

The reports by the respective Houses on the bills containing the fiscal year 1985 National Defense Programs of the Department of Energy contained details on the budget request and policy guidance and requirements with regard to many aspects of the program. Unless modifying language is included in this statement of managers, the report language, to include guidance, recommendations and requirements, included in both the report of the House of Representatives (H. Rept. 98-724) and of the Senate (S. Rept 98-500) is concurred in by the conferees.

Contractor liability for injury or loss of property arising out of atomic weapons testing program (sec. 1631)

Section 301 of the Senate amendment adopted by the conferees is identical to a provision contained in the Administration's legislative request transmitted to the Congress in support of the President's budget for Department of Energy National Security Programs for fiscal year 1985. This section would provide a remedy against the United States for injury, loss of property, personal injury, or death due to exposure to radiation on acts or omissions by a contractor carrying out atomic weapons tests under a contract with, and under the direction and control of, the United States. It would provide that the Attorney General of the United States defend civil actions brought against contractors for injury, loss of property, personal injury, or death due to exposure to radiation resulting from a contractor's activities in carrying out nuclear weapons tests on behalf of the government. The section would extend the time for filing administrative claims against the government.

The Senate provision narrowly defines the term "contractor" as a contractor or cost reimbursement subcontractor participating in the conduct of the United States atomic weapons testing program for the Department of Energy or its predecessor agencies, including those contractors who have conducted research concerning the health effects of radiation in connection with testing under contract with the Department of Energy or its predecessor agencies.

Cost effective funding of nuclear weapons (sec. 1632)

Section 331 of the Senate amendment would direct the President to establish a blue ribbon task group to examine procedures used by the Department of Defense and the Department of Energy in establishing requirements and providing resources for the United States nuclear weapons program. The task group would be required to submit within 270 days of enactment a report to the President and to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives containing its findings and recommendations. Although section 331 would require the members of the task group to be jointly appointed by the President and the majority and minority leaders of the Senate and House of Representatives, the conferees adopted an amended version that more clearly spells out the qualifications of potential members and provides for the appointment of four members by the chairmen and ranking minority members of the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

In summary, the conferees agreed to a provision that would require the establishment of a Blue Ribbon Task Group to examine the procedures used by the Department of Defense and the Department of Energy in establishing requirements for, and in providing resources for the nuclear weapons programs. The provision details areas that the conferees want the Blue Ribbon Group to examine; namely,

(1) ways to improve coordination between the Department of Defense and the Department of Energy to ensure cost effective management of nuclear weapons activities;

(2) budgeting and management procedures; and

(3) whether the Department of Defense should assure responsibility for the funding of Department of Energy weapons activities and materials production programs.

In specifying areas for study, the conferees do not intend to limit unnecessarily the scope of the study by the Group. For instance, it may prove prudent for the Group to break the weapons activities program into its major subprograms—research and development, testing and production and surveillance—and make different recommendations at the subprogram level. Similarly, it may prove prudent to expand the scope of the effort to look at weapons costs in other Department of Energy programs such as the safeguards and security program, the nuclear waste program, etc. The conferees expect the Group to look at the entire issue at whatever level of detail the Group determines is appropriate.

Review of the inertial confinement fusion program (sec. 1633)

Section 332 of the Senate amendment would require the President to establish a technical review group to review the Defense Inertial Confinement Fusion program. The technical review group, composed of persons trained and experienced in the scientific disciplines related to the design and testing of nuclear weapons, would review the accomplishments, management, goals, and anticipated contributions of the Inertial Confinement Fusion program in future years, and submit its findings to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives and to the President in three phases. A first report would be submitted before February 1, 1985; a second report would be submitted before June 1, 1985; and a final report would be submitted before May 1, 1986. Upon the submission of its final report, the technical review group is abolished.

The conferees adopted an amended version of section 332 that more clearly delineates the duties of the review group and the qualifications of its potential members.

Naval nuclear propulsion program (sec. 1634)

Section 333 of the Senate amendment would provide that Executive Order No. 12344, dated February 1, 1982, that established the relationship and responsibilities of the Department of the Navy and the Department of Energy with respect to the Naval Nuclear Propulsion program would remain in force until changed by law. The conferees adopted this provision.

Authorization for production of the 155-millimeter artillery-fired atomic projectile (sec. 1635)

Section 334 of the Senate amendment would authorize the Secretary of Energy to obligate not more than $50.0 million for the construction of facilities necessary to produce the 155-millimeter artillery-fired atomic projectile as originally authorized as Project No. 82-D-109 as contained in the Department of Energy National Security and Military Applications of Nuclear Energy Authorization Act for fiscal year 1982. This section would also establish limitations and conditions upon the production of 155-millimeter and 8-inch artillery-fired atomic projectiles and require that the Secretary of Defense submit an implementation plan for producing and retiring existing nuclear artillery warheads prior to the further obligation of funds for such warheads. The conferees adopted this provision.

TITLE XVII—U.S. INSTITUTE OF PEACE

Title IV of the Senate amendment would establish the United States Academy of Peace.

The academy would be an independent, nonprofit corporation maintaining its principal office in the District of Columbia. Headed by a board of directors to be appointed by the President and the Congress, the academy would provide graduate level education and training for students enrolled in other institutions of learning and for private sector and governmental organizations and individuals. It would conduct research, including research for Federal departments and agencies, and it would fund research at other institutions in order to complement existing programs of peace studies and international affairs. The results of this research would be published and disseminated by the peace academy. The academy would establish a Jennings Randolph Center for International Peace at which scholars and leaders in peace from the United States and abroad would pursue scholarly inquiry and other appropriate forms of communication on international peace for periods of up to two years.

Title IV of the Senate amendment would authorize $23.5 million for the peace academy. Of this amount, $7.5 million would be available for acquisition of the academy's headquarters facilities in the Washington, D.C. area. $6 million would be available for operations during fiscal year 1986, and $10 million would be available for operations during fiscal 1987.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with the following amendments:

changed the name "Academy" to "Institute;"

revised the provisions relating to the composition of the Board of Directors to provide that all voting directors would be Presidential appointees confirmed by the Senate, thus avoiding any possible constitutional questions; dropped all references to "site," acquisition of property, establishment of schools, and offices; dropped the capitalization fund;

provided authority for GSA to provide administrative services on a reimbursable basis; provided for a two-year authorization of $16 million, eliminating the $7.5 million capitalization fund; and changed the name "Jennings Randolph Center" to "Jennings Randolph Program."

TITLES NOT ADOPTED

The Senate amendment contained a provision (Title II) that would provide military construction authorization and related authority in support of the military departments for fiscal year 1985.

The House bill contained no similar provision; however, the House of Representatives passed separate legislation, H.R. 5604, for this purpose. The Senate subsequently amended H.R. 5604 by striking all after the enacting clause and inserting the language of Title II of the Senate amendment.

H.R. 5604, as amended, was subsequently passed by the Congress and signed into law by the President (Public Law 98-407).

Consequently, the conferees agreed to delete Title II of the Senate amendment.

The Senate recedes.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the order of the House of September 25, 1984, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 5167) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1985 for the military functions of the Department of Defense, to prescribe military personnel levels for that fiscal year for the Department of Defense and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the order of the House of Tuesday, September 25, 1984, the conference report is considered as having been read.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRICE] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DICKINSON] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRICE].

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to bring before the House today the conference report on H.R. 5167, the fiscal year 1985 Defense authorization.

The conference on this bill has been the most difficult one I have ever experienced. The conferees struggled with resolution of the two sides' position with respect to the MX missile, as well as testing of the antisatellite weapon and other important defense questions and, in addition, a large number of general provisions—most of which were not even in the committee's jurisdiction.

The conference broke up in late July when no agreement could be reached on resolution of the MX missile issue and overall funding levels. The House conferees felt they could not accept the uncompromising position offered by the Senate. The conference was in recess for almost 1½ months before negotiations between the Speaker and the majority leader of the Senate produced an agreement on these issues. When this agreement was reached, the conference was reconvened and this conference report is consistent with the agreement negotiated by the Speaker and the majority leader of the Senate with respect to MX and overall funding.

For the MX, funds are authorized at a level of $2.5 billion for fiscal year 1985. However, only $1 billion of those funds may be spent for deployment of the missiles authorized in fiscal year 1984 and for certain long-lead requirements and spare parts for the fiscal year 1985 program. The remaining $1.5 billion is fenced until the Congress approved, through a joint resolution, expenditure of the funds for the procurement of 21 MX missiles in fiscal year 1985 in a vote to occur next March. In accordance with the negotiated agreement, a subsequent agreement will also occur in the appropriations process on the release of a fence on these funds in the appropriations bill. On overall funding levels, the Speaker and the majority leader of the Senate agreed that the authorization level would be $297 billion and this bill is consistent with that level of funding.

As many Members know, the number of tests to be permitted in the ASAT program for fiscal year 1985 was in contention and that issue was resolved at no more than two successful tests during fiscal year 1985.

The House language forbidding the introduction of combat forces into Central America is contained in this report as sense of Congress language to the same effect and a restriction on funding for the Sea-Launched Cruise Missile Program was deleted in favor of a report concerning the verification of nuclear versus conventional warheads on such missiles.

With respect to the Space Defense Initiative Program [SDI], the conferees agreed to reduce the program by $150 million—a reduction that many of the House conferees would have preferred to be higher.

In general, the authorization level provided in this conference report will go a long way toward improving the type of equipment available to the Armed Forces and the conditions of service under which they operate. There have been substantial increases in operations and maintenance funding that will improve the current, as well as the near term, readiness of our military forces. With the threat we face in the world today, expenditures at this level are needed. The level of real growth approved in this legislation is within a range that I believe this country can continue consistently for a long period of time. The military has its problems when funding levels change abruptly—either up or down—thus causing some of the inefficiencies we have all heard about. In this regard, I should mention that provisions in this bill will go a long way to solving problems in the pricing of spare parts in the Department of Defense.

I am convinced that the provisions contained in this report will eliminate the egregious examples of overpricing referred to by the news media recently and reaffirm the confidence of the taxpayer that their money is being spent wisely.

The House bill had contained reasonably broad efforts at reorganization of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Unfortunately, the Senate was adamant and would accept only a portion of these reforms. However, I think this process of improving the organization within the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Department of Defense as a whole is just beginning.

Finally, I should mention that this bill contains authority to commence an educational assistance program for military personnel proposed by my colleague from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY]. While he will certainly tell you that he is not completely happy with the outcome of this item in conference, the Senate conferees strongly opposed such a program at this time and the compromise that is contained in this report will permit our future service personnel the opportunity, on a test basis, to become eligible for an educational assistance program as a result of their military service.

Before I complete my statement, I would like to mention that this conference report contains funding for the advanced technology bomber and advanced cruise missile programs, the details of which are highly classified. However, I have arranged for representatives of the Air Force to be available in room H-137 of the Capitol until noon for Members who wish to be briefed on the status of this program.

Mr. Speaker, the conference report represents good legislation—even though it was very difficult to get to this point in the evolution of the bill. I urge the Members to support this conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KILDEE). The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRICE] has consumed 8 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DICKINSON].

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to appear today to urge my colleagues to accept the conference report to accompany H.R. 5167, the fiscal year 1985 defense authorization bill.

As the chairman has pointed out and as many of you know, this year the budget and authorization processes have been fraught with uncertainty and delay. Starting with the failure of the Budget Committees to agree on a conference settlement and extending to the inability of the House and Senate defense authorization conferees to agree on a conference settlement earlier this summer, there was real concern that the legislative processes were critically wounded.

However, due to the personal efforts of the Speaker and the majority leader of the other body, a framework for a conference agreement for the defense authorization bill was established within the past week.

As a result, we were able to reinitiate and complete the defense conference during a marathon session spanning about 20 hours.

The elements of the agreement between the Speaker and Senator BAKER are contained within the bill. These include the agreement on MX specifying that $2.5 billion be allocated for 21 missiles in fiscal year 1985 but that $1.5 billion of that bill total would not be available for obligation until two resolutions of approval of the MX system are enacted by the Congress. Under expedited procedures, the consideration of the first authorizing resolution would occur before the Easter district work period, and a vote on the second joint appropriating resolution would occur not more than 1 calendar day later.

The other prime element of the agreement—the overall authorization limit of $297 billion is satisfied in this report.

The level of authorization provided in this bill provides for a real growth rate over inflation of 6.9 percent. In the opinion of a majority of the members of our committee, this is a reasonable rate of growth if sustained over a period of time. I have made statements in the past supporting a reasonable and steady growth rate of our defense capability rather than harmful periods of feast and famine. I hope this year's appropriation and next year's budget and final appropriation support a more stable pattern of funding.

The conference resolved other important issues. In addressing the sea-launched cruise missile issue, the House language that placed a moratorium on SLCM deployment was replaced by a requirement for DOD to report to the Congress on means to differentiate between nuclear and conventional SLCM's. This is an important issue as it bears directly on the ability to verify any arms control agreement.

The committee restricted or otherwise reduced funds on two programs that are encountering difficulties in development. In the case of the division air defense [Divad] gun, conference action permits long lead funding of Divad components but prohibits final assembly until the Divad demonstrates it can meet its performance requirements.

Funding for the Advanced Medium Range Air-to-Air Missile Program was drastically reduced to $115 million compared to the administration request of $377 million, because the conferees are concerned about increased program cost and a development schedule that has slipped by 8 months. With respect to other efforts to contain costs, the conferees improved the methods and procedures used by the services to procure spare parts.

In the research and development area, the administration requested $34 billion for fiscal year 1985. The conferees agreed to authorize $32 billion of this request, a reduction of almost $2 billion for the Trident II Missile Program; significant funding for the Advanced Technology Bomber and Advanced Cruise Missile Program, the level being classified for both of these; and $1.6 billion for the strategic defense initiative.

The conferees were finally able to agree to the controversy on ASAT testing, allowing for two intercept tests following a certification by the President, that is similar to last year's Tsongas amendment. The conferees had extensive debate on this issue as well as the level of funding for the strategic defense initiative. I believe that we have a very solid research and development package, one that is somewhat higher than the House would prefer but one that will provide a good basis for a large number of our emerging technology programs.

In summary, I believe this is a bill that my colleagues should support—one that continues the modernization of our forces at a prudent, steady pace. I urge its adoption.

If there are any questions that any Member might have we will be glad to try to respond right now.

I will not comment on the rest of the contents of the bill because I think it is pretty well known, but I would like to make a few personal observations.

So far as I know, this conference was unique in that for the first time there were more special conferees appointed by the Speaker than there were regular conferees dealing with the bill. We had 39 special conferees for special purposes and only 14 members from the House Armed Services Committee.

I do not think that there was any ulterior motive. I am not trying to ascribe this to the Speaker or to anyone but I am saying that in one instance, we had more special conferees on, I believe it was the so-called GI bill, that could outvote the number of members of the committee; 39 special conferees; we did not even have room for them in the conference room.

I would hope that this would not be a precedent and we would never see again that the Speaker, due to lobbying and the pressure put on him from other special interests, would put more people on the committee to vote for special interests than there are committee members serving. This is, pure and simple, a stacking of the committee, or a possibility that a committee could be stacked to force a decision contrary to what the House has voted and to what the committee has voted by picking special conferees. This happened. I hope that never again would we see this.

I know that the House conferees from the Committee on Armed Services fought valiantly to maintain the House position. As a matter of fact, in two instances the Senate stonewalled certain issues and in order to maintain the House position. Our committee got up and terminated the conference and walked out in order to maintain the House position, to maintain and to insure the integrity of what the House had told us to do.

So we did what we were supposed to do. It is not necessary to stack the committee, to put special conferees on. When an item is put in and we pass it on the House floor, when we go to committee we will maintain that House position.

I think it is a travesty. I think if we take this as a precedent, other committees will find, in time to come, if this sets a trend and a precedent, that the work of their committee is not going to be honored and it will be undone by just a special few who could be hand selected and appointed.

I would also like to say, as long as I am making some complaints here, that we had a lack of understanding and assistance from this administration. I speak as a Republican. I think the administration was terribly shortsighted and ill informed. We could have worked out the agreement that we finally wound up with. We offered a better deal for the administration a month ago and were turned down. We offered one affirmative vote on the MX in April or March of next year. The Senate, acting on, I think, instructions from the administration, said, "No, we will not consider it." They stonewalled it. They finally wound up taking two affirmative votes. We offered them a much better deal but there was a lack of communication. The President was getting very bad advice from somewhere and he wound up getting a worse deal than we offered 6 weeks ago when we could have already concluded this long ago.

So I just want to put the monkey on the back where it belongs. I think DOD was ill informed. I think they were giving bad advice to the administration. I think the administration accepted that advice, but I think finally, between the agreement of our Speaker and the majority leader, we came up with as good a bill as we could. We considered the feelings, the instructions that the House had been given, so really the product that we are offering here in the form of a conference report, I am convinced, is the best that could be done. We stayed in conference until 2 a.m. the day before yesterday to get this and bring it to the House floor so that we could stay ahead of the Committee on Appropriations, as is the standard procedure.

I would urge the Members to accept the conference report as the best effort that we could put forth, the best product that we could turn out. We did the best we could with the instructions that we had, and I think we did a good job.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DICKINSON] has consumed 7 minutes.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT].

Mr. BENNETT. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is a good bill, a good conference report, and I hope we will overwhelmingly approve it. There are a lot of problems answered in it and I am delighted that the MX problem has been settled in a way which I think is affirmative.

I would like to say just a few words about some of the things in the bill that I was very much interested in which would have been lost if we had not had the attention we gave to these. They could have been lost very readily by having no conference report, which could have happened.

One was the Merchant Marine and Defense Commission to be set up to try to find adequate shipping facilities for the United States in case of war; and to help our merchant marines generally. Then there was the Nichols bill, as amended by BEDELL, on spare parts, constraint of costs and overruns. It is much needed legislation.

Then there is the needed pay raise for the military and the former spouses measure, the GI bill, and the Peace Institute. That Institute started off in conference being a Peace Academy but now will be a program somewhat like the Fulbright program, giving grants for scholars and others seeking ways of trying to find peace. It is a proposal very similar to one I introduced over 20 years ago; and I believe it too is a very meritorious measure.

So I think overall this has been a very affirmative conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. DERRICK) who wishes to engage in a colloquy.

Mr. DERRICK. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, at the outset, I would like to commend my friend, the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Procurement and Military Nuclear Systems, for his usual outstanding work in bringing this critical legislation to the House floor for consideration.

I would like to take this opportunity to ask my colleague a question regarding the new production reactor. Mr. Speaker, I would note that the subcommittee chairman has already responded to my inquiry by letter, and my purpose today is to make our correspondence a part of the legislative history on this bill.

My question, therefore, is whether my colleague from New York can give me assurances that there has been no decision reached as of this date on the location for the new production reactor, and that the selection process will be conducted in such a manner as to fully and fairly consider the Savannah River Plant a site for the reactor?

Mr. STRATTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DERRICK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. STRATTON. As I indicated in my letter to my friend from South Carolina, there has been no decision as of this date regarding the siting for the new production reactor, and I intend to ensure that the process by which the ultimate site is chosen will be a fair process.

The Savannah River Plant has many attributes which will make it a strong candidate for the new production reactor, and it will be thoroughly considered as a candidate site for the new production reactor when and if the committee decides to move forward with construction of the reactor.

The letter referred to follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, May 24, 1984.

Hon. BUTLER DERRICK,
U.S. House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR BUTLER: This is in reference to our recent conversations regarding issues related to the H.R. 5395, the Department of Energy National Security and Military Applications of Nuclear Energy Authorization Act of 1985. Specifically, I appreciate your interest and concern regarding the Armed Services Committee's view towards the New Production Reactor (NPR).

At the outset, I would note that I share your concern over statements that the NPR would be constructed at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory (INEL). Quite simply, as of this date, there has been no decision reached as to the most appropriate location for the NPR. I can assure you that the Savannah River Plant will receive thorough review and examination as a possible location for the reactor.

In fact, three principal candidate sites are presently being studied by the Department of Energy as possible locations for the NPR: the Savannah River Site (SR) in South Carolina, the Hanford Site (RL) in Washington, and the INEL in Idaho. As you may know, correspondence has recently been forwarded to Congress by Department of Energy Secretary Hodel confirming that his Department is investigating these particular sites, and to request a reprogramming of fiscal year 1984 funds to continue efforts to compile "environmental impact data to permit comparison of the candidate sites on a uniform basis, performing safety analyses including risk assessments, and preparing environmental documentation, such as the EIS."

Moreover, the Savannah River Plant has many attributes which will weigh in its favor as the decision on the location of the NPR is reached: it is the location of the majority of currently operating nuclear defense production reactors (with the work force and technical base to support such operations), and it is the site for the Defense Waste Processing Facility which will solidify and prepare for permanent disposal the waste produced by these production reactors. And as your efforts indicate, I am confident that the mission of the Savannah River Plant has the strong endorsement of the South Carolina Congressional delegation.

Again, I would stress that there has been no decision reached on the ultimate location of the NPR. The funds for preliminary studies and environmental analyses, as well as the actual construction funds, must be authorized by the Congress. Therefore, Congress will ultimately have the final word on the siting of the NPR. Please accept my assurances that the process for choosing a site for the NPR will be a fair one, and one which will fully evaluate the Savannah River Plant as a potential site.

Again, thank you for your interest and concern in this most important issue. I look forward to working with you and members of the Senate Armed Services Committee over the coming months to reach a fair and equitable decision on this matter—and one which will ensure an adequate and reliable supply of critical defense materials.

With warmest regards, I am

Respectfully,

SAMUEL S. STRATTON, Chairman,
Subcommittee on Procurement and Military Nuclear Systems.

Mr. DERRICK. I thank the gentleman from New York for his comments and clarifications.

Mr. Speaker, the Congress has the final say on questions of when, where and how the new production reactor will be constructed. I am convinced that the merits of the Savannah River Plant will speak for themselves, the Glennan Commission findings will speak for themselves, and the commitment of South Carolinians to the U.S. defense program will speak for themselves. I have taken this time today only to ensure that partisan rhetoric will be kept to a minimum, and that the process for choosing the site for this new reactor will be a fair one. Quite simply, the assurance of an adequate supply of nuclear defense materials is much too important to become a subject of partisan bickering.

I greatly appreciate the indulgence of my friend from New York, and look forward to working with him and his committee on this most important issue over the coming months.

Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the authorization measure for Department of Energy national security programs for fiscal year 1985 is included in this conference agreement. Can the gentleman from New York indicate to me whether this is the case?

Mr. STRATTON. If the gentleman will yield further, yes, this in included in the conference report as one of the measures that was agreed to by both Houses.

Mr. DERRICK. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. STRATTON].

Mr. STRATTON. I thank the gentleman for yieldng this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Procurement and Military Nuclear Systems, I want to highlight the conference action on military procurement and the Department on Energy authorization bill that was included in the overall conference package.

In military procurement, the conferees were faced with resolving nearly 450 program differences and a significant number of bill language differences. As agreed, the conferees are recommending authorization of $99.5 billion for military procurement. Although this figure is approximately $3 billion higher than the amount approved in the House-passed bill, it is consistent with the $297 billion defense level that was agreed to by the administration and congressional leadership.

These authorizations will go for such major strategic programs as:

MX—$2.5 billion, of which $1.5 billion for 21 missiles is fenced until a joint resolution of approval is adopted by the Congress before the Easter recess next year.

B-1B—$7.1 billion is for 34 new strategic bombers.

In the conventional area, the conferees recommend authorization of $1.7 billion for 840 M-1 tanks, $991.5 for 680 Bradley fighting vehicles and $2.4 billion for the procurement and support of the Army ammunition program. These actions will continue the Army's modernization program.

In the naval aircraft line, the conferees agreed to authorize $215 million for the A-6E, $406 million for nine P-3C's and $116.8 million for the adversary combat trainer aircraft. The additional $50 million for the adversary aircraft will permit the Navy to restructure its procurement strategy should it decide to take such action.

The conferees agreed to authorize 39 C-12 aircraft, 18 C or KC-130's and 144 Apache helicopters. These actions will continue the Guard and Reserve force modernization program.

Another $250 million is recommended to continue the important NATO cooperative air defense program. The conferees also agreed to include the necessary enabling legislation to provide the Secretary of Defense to implement the recently concluded joint airbase defense agreement between the United States and the Federal Republic of Germany.

One other NATO-related item involved the so-called Nunn-Cohen amendment. The conferees agreed to include the language, although modified. It is designed to spur the allies to increase their spending commitment to NATO and increase the Alliance's conventional capability. The House conferees, however, have certain reservations about the impact of the amendment and the Armed Services Committee intends to hold hearings next session on this subject.

The conferees are recommending authorization of $7.3 billion for Department of Energy defense programs—approximately $433 million below the budget request. One significant legislative provision is included in the conference settlement: A study commission would be established to evaluate the management and the cost effectiveness of the nuclear weapons complex.

In all, Mr. Speaker, the conference agreement represents the good faith and, I might say, tireless efforts of all the House conferees who worked under incredibly difficult conditions and severe time constraints to fashion the conference report that is before the House today. I urge its adoption.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN].

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the committee for looking into the serious problem of the quality of material used for the lining of jackets worn by our troops. As the gentleman from Alabama is aware, the natural fiber, rayon, has long been used for the lining in military jackets, and the lining is produced in my district. This is an important job base I want to protect for my constituents. More importantly for our troops, however, rayon is a more wearable lining because of its natural superiority in strength and "breathing" qualities.

The Army is implementing a change to synthethic polyester which, for a minimal cost difference per jacket of about 30 cents, would give our troops a much less comfortable jacket.

The committee, after reviewing this matter, has ordered a serious second look at this change by the Army. The Committee's concern is evident and I am confident a proper evaluation will reflect the need to maintain our high standards of quality as in the past. I appreciate the ranking Republican member's leadership.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the distinguished gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. HOLT].

Mrs. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report. As one of the conferees, I can truly state that it was one of the most difficult and intense conferences I have ever attended. There were 1,200 differences to be resolved by 3 a.m. yesterday morning. The conference report contains, in my judgment, the proper mix of programs to provide for a strong national defense.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to extend my sincere appreciation to all of the House conferees and especially staff who labored very long and hard to resolve the 1,200 differences between the two bills. I would like to express particular appreciation to our chairman, Mr. PRICE, and the ranking minority member, Mr. DICKINSON, for providing the lead in reaching a conference position which I feel reflects the will of the Congress.

As a conferee, I devoted a large portion of my time in working with the Senate conferees in resolving the large number of procurement differences. The conferees were able to resolve major weapon systems differences in the procurement area that included:

B-1B bomber: The House bill contained $7.1 billion for 34 B-1B bombers. The Senate bill contained $8.2 billion for 34 B-1B's, and the conferees agreed to $7.17 billion for 34 B-1B bombers.

MX: The House bill contained $3.5 billion for 15 MX missiles. The Senate bill contained $4.3 billion for 21 MX missiles, and the conferees agreed to $4.2 billion for 21 MX missiles.

F-16 Falcon: The House bill contained $3.4 billion for 150 F-16 aircraft. The Senate bill contained $3.6 billion for 150 F-16's, and the conferees agreed to $3.5 billion for 150 F-16 aircraft.

F/A-18 Hornet: The House bill contained $2.7 billion for 84 F/A-18 aircraft. The Senate bill contained $2.8 billion for 84 F/A-18's, and the conferees agreed to $2.76 billion for 84 F/A-18 aircraft.

F-15 Eagle: The House bill contained $1.9 billion for 40 F-15 aircraft. The Senate bill contained $2.4 billion for 42 F-15's, and the conferees agreed to $2.25 billion for 42 F-15 aircraft.

M-1 Abrams: The House bill contained $1.8 billion for 840 M-1 tanks. The Senate bill contained $1.7 billion for 720 tanks, and the conferees agreed to $1.8 billion for 840 tanks.

Bradley fighting vehicle: The House bill contained $1.1 billion for 710 Bradley fighting vehicles. The Senate bill contained $1.05 billion for 655 vehicles, and the conferees agreed to $1.06 billion for 680 vehicles.

HARM air-to-surface missile: The House bill contained $554.5 million for 1,349 HARM air-to-surface missiles. The Senate bill contained $676.1 million for 1,674 missiles, and the conferees agreed to $625.0 million for 1,571 HARM missiles.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, there were several major language and dollar differences, including the MX, the sea-launched cruise missile [SLCM], and ASAT that delayed the completion of the conference. While I am not personally, totally satisfied with the resolution of many of the language differences, I sincerely believe that the report before you reflects a fair compromise.

I, therefore, encourage my colleagues to support the conference report.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BEDELL], who, I might point out, was a special conferee on certain issues within the conference report.

Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, the reason I rise is to thank the conference committee for the work that the members have done, particularly with regard to an amendment that I offered to this bill on the floor of the House.

The amendment I offered was an amendment to change the method of procurement of spare parts by the military, and it came about because of my chairmanship of one of the subcommittees of the Committee on Small Business in which we found that the Government had paid over $10,000 for some spare parts that I was able to buy at a retail hardware store for $92.44.

The conference committee has recognized this problem, just as the House did. The House adopted my amendment by a vote of 324 to 75.

It has been estimated by the GAO that there is a potential savings of from 30 percent to 40 percent on the procurement of spare parts for the military. The military purchases some $20 billion in spare parts per year, so there is a potential savings of some $6 billion to $8 billion per year.

These amendments by themselves will not bring about all those savings, but certainly they move a long way toward doing so.

I thought that it would be important to the Members of the House of Representatives who supported my amendment to know of the success we have had in getting this in the conference report, and I also wish to thank the conferees for their cooperation in seeing that this was included in the conference report. I especially want to thank the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. NICHOLS] for the leadership and the help that he gave in this particular effort.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my support for the procurement reform provisions of H.R. 5167, the conference report on the Department of Defense Authorization Act for 1985. This final product is the result of months of debate and the hard work of the Small Business and Armed Services Committees of both Houses.

As the sponsor and a conferee for one of the House amendments on procurement reform, I can tell the supporters of the reforms I proposed that our concerns are accurately represented and addressed by this conference report.

Through the Small Business Oversight Subcommittee, which I chair, I studied some of the procurement practices that led the Pentagon to pay exorbitant prices for simple items such as hammers, wrenches, and bolts. In offering my amendment to the DOD bill last May, I focused on those parts of the Pentagon's procurement system we studied in my subcommittee. At the same time, the Armed Services Investigations Subcommittee, chaired by BILL NICHOLS, presented a package of reforms it developed from its extensive study of the Pentagon's procurement problems. The House accepted my package by a vote of 324 to 75 and then adopted the Nichols package as amended by a vote of 390 to 0.

The conference committee crafted the procurement reform provisions of the House and Senate bills into a sensible and workable legislative initiative. The conference bill requires that:

First, a contractor may not charge the United States more than the lowest commercial price for commercially available items except if the terms and conditions of the contract dictate a higher price or for national security considerations;

Second, the Secretary of Defense must prescribe regulations that require a contractor to identify those items it sells to the military that it did not produce or add significant value. These regulations must also provide for the proper allocations of incurred overhead on items sold to the military;

Third, no one may be denied the opportunity to bid solely because they are not on a qualified bidders list or manufacturers list, or because their product is not on a qualified products list if they can demonstrate to the contracting officer that their product does meet or will meet the quality assurances required by the military;

Fourth, all quality assurance standards are to be made available whenever possible and potential bidders must be given a prompt opportunity to demonstrate compliance with those standards. All standards must be reviewed within 7 years of establishment or enforcement;

Fifth, the Office of Federal Procurement Policy to define by regulation the legitimate proprietary interest of the United States for products that were developed exclusively with Federal funds, exclusively at private expense, and in part with public and private funds;

Sixth, the military establish reverse engineering programs to allow potential bidders to purchase or borrow spare parts for the purpose of design replication;

Seventh, contracts for goods and services define whether the United States has rights to the data to be delivered under the terms of the contract. Payments to the contractor may be halted if any of the contract terms pertaining to technical data rights and use are not upheld;

Eight, in evaluating a bidder's price proposal on a system, the military must consider the extent to which the bidder is proposing to use supplies that are available from the national supply system and that items that are needed to service the system are available on a competitive basis. Consideration must also be given to the rights of the United States to use the technical data to be provided under the contract;

Ninth, each military agency and the Defense Logistics Agency establish an Office of Competition Advocate to review noncompetitive contracting;

Tenth, the DOD publish, for comment in the Federal Register, all regulations that have a significant impact on procurement policy, regulation, procedure or form;

Eleventh, The Secretary of Defense establish personnel appraisal systems that encourage DOD employees to achieve cost saving in contracting procedures; and Twelfth, the military solicit from its contractors information on whether the Government is purchasing supplies in economic order quantities that are advantageous to the United States.

Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that this bill covers a lot of ground. Basically, we have tried to legislate in areas that the Congress is best able to focus its efforts. I must point out to my colleagues that, in my opinion, many of the problems at the Department of Defense stem from the attitude within the Department. These procurement reforms we will enact today do not solve all of the Department's problems. In order to stop further procurement nightmares, everyone in the Pentagon, from the Secretary on down, must devote a full faith effort to stop the business-as-usual attitude that seems to prevail.

One thing is clear. This Congress has responded to the problem. We have also sent a message that we can and will act in this area in the future if the procurement practices of the military do not respond in a responsible and positive manner.

I want to close by thanking those members of the Small Business and Armed Services Committees who worked together on this package. I especially want to point out the contribution of BILL NICHOLS and PARREN MITCHELL to this effort.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. NICHOLS].

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 5167. As everyone in this Chamber knows, this has been a most difficult Defense authorization bill to bring to a conclusion. I want to pay my respects to my fellow conferees who have persevered throughout the summer and into the fall to reach a successful compromise. In particular, I want to commend Chairman PRICE for his leadership. His unfailing faith in the ability of the Congress to resolve divisive issues sustained us.

Mr. Speaker, I am particularly proud that the conference report contains the Defense Procurement Reform Act, a provision designed to ensure that the Department of Defense will hopefully never again pay $436 for a $17 hammer, or $110 for a $0.04 diode.

Over a year and a half ago the Armed Services Committee began an examination of spare parts procurement by the Department of Defense. I want to thank my colleagues who so diligently attended these hearings and pursued the examination which turned out to be a very complex issue. We found the principal reason why DOD activities were paying excessive prices was the lack of competition and lack of emphasis on good management.

This authorization bill encourages competition, first, by requiring that Government procurement personnel be evaluated on their efforts to increase competition and to achieve cost savings. We found that, in the past, Government buyers were graded primarily on the number of their procurements and the speed with which they were executed, rather than on their efficiency and exercise of initiative. As a result, buyers tended to take the easy route of sole source procurement, or of going back to the earlier supplier without any effort to determine whether a better price might be obtained from another supplier. This bill will encourage procurement personnel to seek suppliers who will provide the Government with better values and will ensure that they are recognized for such efficiency in their personal evaluation and ultimately in their pay.

Mr. Speaker, this bill also broadens competition by prohibiting prime contractors from unreasonably restricting their subcontractors in direct sales of their products to the Government. It will also require the identification of the actual manufacturer of an item supplied to the Government, the national stock number of the item, and any technical data related to it. This identifying information would make it easier to reprocure the item competitively.

Agency heads would be required, before contracting to purchase an item, to identify other possible sources of supply, such as the supply system of the DOD and General Services Administration, and to review the procurement history of the item. It also would preclude the Department from refusing to allow any qualified manufacturer from bidding.

The bill also provides a framework for the Government to challenge a contractor's restriction on the release of technical data and provides for the recovery of costs incurred by the Government in challenging unsubstantiated data rights claims.

The bill will authorize the Secretary of Defense to prescribe by regulation standards to require a time limit on the duration of any restriction on the Government's use of technical data. This provision will ensure that the Government's data rights are not abused and assure that the Government will be able to buy replenishment parts at fair and reasonable prices during the lifetime of its major systems.

Mr. Speaker, this provision is very comprehensive and addresses as many of the problems we have found in the procurement of spare and replacement parts that could be addressed legislatively. It will focus the attention of the agency heads on the problem and require that all Government procurement personnel strive to obtain more cost-effective and efficient purchases, and will ensure these reforms will result in systemic changes.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the bill will effect a vast improvement in spare parts procurement, and I commend it to the attention of my colleagues.

Mr. Speaker, I am also pleased with the provisions of this bill relating to the organization and functioning of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. By no means were we able to gain acceptance of all of the important reforms contained in the House bill. Much remains to be done. But it is noteworthy that the conference report commits the Armed Services Committees of both bodies to a comprehensive effort to reform and modernize the organization of the entire Department of Defense.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud that this body has led the way in initiating the movement toward Department of Defense reform. And I can assure you that the Committee on Armed Services will continue to play a leading role in this effort.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY].

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, this conference agreement represents a lot of hard work on the part of many people, members of the conference, and especially the staff members. Conference agreements are always a matter of give and take. In other words, they are a compromise. This agreement is no exception. Because of the hard work and guidance on the part of our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRICE], the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DICKINSON], and other members of the conference, we were able to do in my opinion an excellent job in maintaining the House position. I commend them for that effort and thank them for a job well done.

There are many scopes of issues in this bill. I would only like to cover a few.

For the past several years Congress has placed greater and greater emphasis on the Guard and Reserve as integral parts of our country's all volunteer force. This report contains some very important provisions which continue that emphasis.

Among other benefits for reservists, medical and dental care for those who develop disease or illness during inactive duty training is provided for. The report provisions also reflect congressional efforts at ensuring that the Guard and Reserve forces continue as recipients of our most modern military equipment. A fair share of O&M funding is also provided for.

Perhaps the most important provisions in this report are those which deal, not with expensive weapons, but rather with an issue which I believe is extremely important to the men and women in the military. The issue is educational benefits, the GI Education Act.

Mr. Speaker, the last issue to be resolved in conference on the DOD authorization bill was the GI bill. Reaching agreement with the other body was not easy. The issue was finally resolved around 2 a.m. Tuesday morning.

I commend all my colleagues who were conferees for the strong support I received from each of them and for their help in supporting the House-passed GI bill.

I must inform my colleagues that when the staff met at a late hour last night to implement what we all thought has been agreed to in conference, three new issues were raised by the other body. Due to an apparent misunderstanding of the Senate staff, the other body insisted that the House recede on three provisions of the House-passed bill. The House conferees had clearly understood that under the conference agreement, the Veterans Educational Assistance Program, knows as VEAP, would be terminated June 30, 1985, with the enactment of the new GI bill program to become effective July 1, 1985. The Senate Armed Services Committee late last night insisted that the VEAP program be suspended, rather than be terminated. This was a major issue. I either had to recede or we would have to again file the conference agreement today. Knowing how hard my colleagues had worked and how many major provisions were contained in this authorization bill, and because of my high regard and respect for each conferee of the House Armed Services Committee, I reluctantly agreed. I had no choice, Mr. Speaker, the way it was presented to me from the other body.

Mr. Speaker, I want my colleagues to know how much I appreciate their strong support in conference on the new GI bill.

Mr. Speaker, this conference agreement represents a lot of hard work on the part of many people, members and staff especially. Conference agreements are always a matter of give and take—in other words, a compromise. This agreement is no exception. Because of the hard work and guidance on the part of our distinguished chairman, Mr. PRICE, and the distinguished gentleman, Mr. DICKINSON, House conferees were able to do an excellent job in maintaining the House position. I commend them for that effort and thank them for a job well done.

The scope of issues addressed in this agreement is extensive. I would like to take time to comment on but a few.

my high regard and respect for each conferee of the House Armed Services Committee, I reluctantly agreed. I had no choice the way it was presented to me from the other body.

Mr. Speaker, I want my colleagues to know how much I appreciate their strong support in conference on the new GI bill. Should the President sign this agreement we will have a new GI bill program. It will work and I plan to proceed to do everything I can to make certain that it is successful.

I urge my colleagues to support the conference agreement.

Mr. McCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana, a member of this committee, who also was educated under the GI bill.

Mr. McCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much.

I first in most profuse gratitude would like to commend the gentleman from Mississippi for all the work that he has done over the years when hardly anyone was attending to this anywhere at all in this Congress. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] stayed with it in the work that he has done for the servicemen and women of the United States for the benefit of our national economy and it will redound to the benefit of all for years to come.

I also want to highly commend the distinguished gentleman from El Paso, TX [Mr. COLEMAN], for all the work he has done on the GI bill and also the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ASPIN]. Although there were disagreements early in the process, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ASPIN] had stuck with us all the way.

I truly think this is an historic day and we stand much in gratitude to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] particularly in the hard and arduous fight with the other body.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from New York, who has been a strong supporter and member of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, one of our ranking members.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I just want to thank General MONTGOMERY for yielding.

I just would like every Member of this body to know, plus every member serving in the Armed Forces today, that if it had not been for SONNY MONTGOMERY, there would not be any peacetime GI bill.

We all take our hats off to SONNY. We know the diligent work the gentleman has put in and all America commends him for it. God bless you.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad I yielded to the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I urge support for the conference agreement.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH].

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

I want to commend my friend and my chairman, the gentleman from Alabama, BILL NICHOLS, who did an absolutely superb job in holding hearings and putting forth constructive proposals designed to make changes in military procurement. I think the language that will become law is positive.

I think the section that my chairman talks about, stating the need to identify the subcontractor, is perhaps the best part of all the provisions in the conference report. It will permit the Government to deal directly with the manufacturer of parts, rather than through a prime contractor, who often acts as a middleman and in some cases, prevents us from dealing directly with the manufacturer.

I think the stress on competition advocates is also excellent.

I want to commend the conference of the House and the Senate for doing these things; but I must take issue with my chairman when he says that he hopes this will go far enough to eliminate the spare parts procurement problem. I do not think it will.

I feel this way because we failed to deal fully with the issue of proprietary rights, those rights that allow contractors to sell and deal exclusively to the Government in monopoly situations for unlimited periods of time.

My chairman mentioned the need for competition. That is what the Air Force AFMAG study and every other study talks about, the need for competition to bring down the price of spare parts. But when we continue to allow monopoly situations to exist in the area of proprietary rights and we continue to let companies be the exclusive suppliers of a particular part to the Government for an extended period of time, we have not solved the entire problem.

I have to, however, commend the conference on the action that it did take, because it was positive action. I just wish we would have gone farther. I think we will continue to see the need for reforms, and I will be around to try to author the constructive reforms in the areas where I think they are needed, particularly in the area of proprietary rights.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the very distinguished and capable gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS].

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DELLUMS. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report. As we consider the conference report on H.R. 5167, the bill providing this country with the military muscle necessary to defend its citizens and deter aggression, I want to call attention to a small, but significant provision—authorization for a U.S. Institute of Peace. Since many of us have worked toward passage of this concept for several years, let me explain the proposal as approved by the DOD conferees.

The authorization in the conference report is a compromise version of the Peace Academy bill which was adopted as an amendment to the Senate Defense authorization bill. Hammered out by the House and Senate principals, the compromise maintains the powers and duties of the Peace Institute, as outlined in both the House and Senate bills, but decentralizes the manner in which those activities will be carried out.

Specifically, the capitalization fund was dropped and all references to site, acquisition of property, and establishment of schools and offices were deleted. Instead, authority was added for the GSA to provide office and administrative services on a reimbursable basis. In line with elimination of a central campus, the name was changed from U.S. Academy of Peace to U.S. Institute of Peace, since some felt that the term Academy suggested "bricks and mortar" and a free-standing educational institution.

Despite the elimination of a central campus, however, the compromise still empowers the Institute, acting through the Board to carry out the following functions, among others:

Develop programs to make international peace and conflict resolution research, education, and training more available and useful to persons in government, private enterprise, and voluntary associations;

Provide, promote, and support peace education and research programs at graduate and postgraduate levels;

Conduct training, symposia, and continuing education programs for practitioners, policymakers and implementers, and citizens generally;

Establish a Jennings Randolph Program for International Peace to provide stipends, grants, or fellowships to scholars and leaders from the United States and abroad to pursue scholarly inquiry and other appropriate forms of communication on international peace and conflict resolution. The conference report provides a 2-year authorization of $16 million to allow the Institute to carry out these activities.

Finally, the compromise included a change in the composition of the Institute's Board of Directors to avoid any constitutional problems which were feared under the composition originally proposed in S. 564 and H.R. 1249. As amended, the board will consist of 15 members, all appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate. Not more than eight members of the Board may be members of the same political party.

As one who served on the Commission for Proposals for the National Academy of Peace and Conflict Resolution and who has pushed legislation to advance the recommendations of that Commission, I am very pleased with the proposal that has been approved by the DOD conferees. Although some may see it as ironic to be providing for a national effort to teach peace-promoting skills in this bill which is generally intended to procure weapons, it should not be difficult to see the logic of enhancing this country's ability to understand conflict and to reduce its reliance on military power alone as a key component of our efforts to maintain national security.

We must have an adequate defense. That does not, however, mean we should continue to depend almost exclusively on military might to respond to world tensions and conflicts. We must realize that we can no longer afford to do so—either from a dollar and cents perspective or from a strategic perspective. The U.S. Institute of Peace, as authorized in the conference report on H.R. 5167, is an important step toward application of that realization.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DELLUMS. I yield to my colleague, the gentlewoman from Colorado.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this conference report. Actually, the conference report is as good as could be expected considering what the original House-passed and Senate-passed versions of the Defense authorization were. On a number of issues of particular importance to me, such as benefits for former spouses of military personnel, the MX, and personnel security, the conference agreement is a major step forward.

But, we must not get lost in the trees of minor victories. We must look at the whole forest. Taken as a whole, this bill substantially increases the possibility of war. H.R. 5167 funds the first installment of 21 MX missiles and holds open the possibility of 21 more next spring. It funds 34 B-1B bombers. The bill authorizes deployment of Pershing II missiles in Europe. It funds sea-launched cruise missiles and Trident II missiles. The bill funds Tomahawk cruise missiles and includes $1.6 billion for research and development of antisatellite weapons. With this bill, we have clearly moved beyond the triad of nuclear deterrence and into a multifaceted, first-strike, hard target kill nuclear arsenal.

Whether or not this new array of delivery systems frightens the Soviet Union, it scares me. It scares me because many of the old constraints to taking the nuclear first shot are gone under this new configuration. Our nuclear arsenal appears to be moving away from discouraging first strikes, and now appears to be encouraging them. Equipped with this new arsenal, we must now hope and pray that reason and prudence can hold sway over anger and machoism long enough so that nuclear disarmament comes before nuclear armageddon.

This bill encourages the risk of conventional war as well. The military buildup of the last few years has been in complex planes, huge ships, and high technology artillery. As a consequence, our overall readiness and sustainability has declined because the bigger and more complex a system is, the more prone it is to failure and the longer it takes troops to learn to use it. Further, big systems are far harder to repair and far more expensive to replace. By buying Sergeant York air defense guns, Arleigh Burke destroyers, and F-15 fighters, we are buying ourselves less readiness.

If our adversaries perceive our lack of readiness and our inability to engage in decisive military action, they will become bolder. I am afraid this is happening. Remember the pathetic sight of the battleship New Jersey hurling Volkswagen-sized shells at the Lebanese countryside and achieving no military purpose whatever. That image demonstrates how unready we are to fight the conflicts which we are called upon to fight. The less ready we are to fight, the more we will have to do so.

I am pleased about language in the conference report requiring further congressional action before more MX missiles can be procured. I am delighted that the eligibility of former military spouses to survivors benefits and health benefits has been expanded. Preventing DOD from implementing the expensive and unnecessary new personnel security requirements promulgated by the Office of Personnel Management will save the taxpayers many millions of dollars. Restricting the use of polygraphs to a small pilot program is a better approach than broadly expanding the use of this unreliable machine. The conference did well to discard antiemployee language in the Senate-passed bill concerning nonappropriated fund workers.

Yet, all the good in this conference report cannot undo the basic terrifying fact that passage of this conference report will increase the likelihood of war because of its shortchanging readiness and sustainability.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my distinguished colleague, the ranking minority member, for yielding to this gentleman a few moments to discuss the conference report.

I would begin by again singling out my distinguished colleague from Mississippi for his diligence in bringing to this body a GI bill that I think will benefit scores of young men and women in this country to the benefit of America, many years into the future.

Second, we spend a great deal of money funding war colleges. It seems to me wholly appropriate that within the confines of this conference report we have seen fit to provide at least some resources to support the concept of a peace academy. It seems to me that if we can talk about war, we can certainly spend some resources pursuing avenues of peace.

But that notwithstanding, Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the conference report. That opposition in no way reflects upon the diligence and the hard work of my colleagues who were parties to the conference and the members of the staff who facilitated this conference report; but I rise in opposition to the conference report for several reasons. Time does not permit my ability to go into any great detail, but I think to authorize $297 billion in 1984 in the military function is a gross obscenity. I think that it embraces policies and programs that fly in the face of the best interest of people in this country and throughout the world.

Third, if you read this conference report, you will find that there are a number of new starts in military weapons that I think will bring great danger to this Nation and great danger to the world.

Economically speaking, this is the cheap end of the deal. In the next 2 or 3 years you are going to see this military budget skyrocket astronomically as the figures start to really fall into place with respect to financing the starts that are in this budget.

I think that there is an alternative direction to pursue. I do not think that it requires that we spend nearly $300 billion per annum on a military budget, rapidly rising toward a half a trillion dollars by the end of this decade.

Again, in summary, while I applaud the effort of all of my colleagues on the conference, I think my colleagues attempted diligently to maintain the integrity of the House position on a number of these matters, it still, in my estimation, embraces a set of policies that do not bode well for America as we move through the decade of the 1980's. I believe we have to find some peace-oriented, nonviolent way to solve our problems, and to place great reliance on military capability, nuclear weapons that will bring us to the brink of disaster is inappropriate, costly, and dangerous.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MAVROULES].

Mr. MAVROULES. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I am just going to take a couple of minutes here to make my own personal observation. Let me congratulate and commend all of the members of the conference committee, certainly beginning with our chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRICE], and our ranking member, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DICKINSON]. I commend you for a number of reasons, because this was my first conference as a conferee and I appreciate the efforts put in by both sides of the aisle in both Houses.

I commend you also for sticking with the position of the House, particularly on the MX-missile language. Although many of you disagree with my position and those of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT] and others, I think it was terribly fair on your part to stick with the position taken by the House in view of the fact that the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. O'NEILL] and the majority leader in the other body, Mr. BAKER, saw fit to intervene in the conference itself. Because of their agreement we were able to move forth in the conference and today we have a pretty good authorization bill.

I support the conference report because of the responsible positions taken by my own members on the Armed Services Committee.

I also want to thank the staff members who put in enormous hours.

Mr. Chairman, my role here this morning is to give credit to you and to all of the other members and all of the subcommittee chairmen who were part of the conference.

One final statement I might make and I might take issue with the ranking member from Alabama [Mr. DICKINSON], I think it is imperative that the Speaker do indeed put conferees aside from those Members who would automatically go on, because we can at least articulate those positions that we fought for on the floor of the House. I think it is better and more meaningful.

Mr. DICKINSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVROULES. I am happy to yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not want to be misunderstood. I do not think it is inappropriate or necessarily bad to have another voice on the conference.

My point was and my point is that when you appoint so many extraneous conferees that they outnumber the regular conference members, then you are in a position of stacking that conference to do something against the will of the committee itself or of the whole floor. So that was my point, not that someone should not be appointed that has an interest, but we had 39 special conferees and only 14 regular conferees. So that was my point and I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. MAVROULES. I thank the gentleman very much for that clarification and thank the chairman for yielding me this time.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SKELTON].

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, among all of the various and sundry provisions that were debated and discussed fully in this conference report there is one part that actually made history. For the first time in 26 years a modernization of the organization of the military, that is the Joint Chiefs of Staff, was made.

This is very important for us to point out because beginning back in 1944 there have been 19 initiatives and attempts to reform the Joint Chiefs of Staff. That is the way the Joint Chiefs do their business within the Pentagon and within the military forces. And only on two occasions were there changes made, in 1947 and again in 1958.

This bill, thanks to the excellent leadership of our friend from Alabama, our distinguished colleague and chairman of the subcommittee that handled this, Chairman BILL NICHOLS, great strides were made in reforming the Joint Chiefs of Staff system. His determination and his devotion to duty in this area will long be remembered.

As the Joint Chiefs of Staff presently operate and as they have in the past, there are a number of flaws. It serves as a committee system. There have been problems with timely and precise advice to the Secretary of Defense and to the President. It has not attracted to the Joint Staff over a period of years, as testified to by an admiral, the very best of the men and women from the various services.

Over a period of 3 years there have been extensive hearings on this subject and now we are finally putting this into law.

I am remiss if I do not say this is not the final and the full action that should be taken. It is only partial. But it is a step forward, Mr. Speaker, and we are on second base and it is a strong, safe second base where we find ourselves in the reform of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

There are seven items that are included in this bill that create a better working relationship within the Joint Chiefs of Staff system and make a stronger chairman and places him in the whole system in a position to give better advice to the President and to the Secretary of Defense.

First, the Joint Chiefs of Staff chairman acts as a spokesman for the CINC's throughout the world. The Joint Chiefs of Staff chairman also decides when the issues under consideration shall be decided by the Joint Chiefs of Staff. That is for the first time he can set the agenda and call an issue up and have it decided.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff chairman also for the first time now may select the Joint Staff officers. Heretofore he has been given what the services gave him.

There are others, but I wish to say this is a step in the right direction and again I thank and commend the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. NICHOLS] for his leadership in this area.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I have no more requests for time, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCURDY].

Mr. MCCURDY. I thank the chairman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, the authorization bill for the Department of Defense is an absolute essential item in preparing our national defense policy. This process, authorization process, has been severely challenged this year.

I have to compliment the leaders of the House Armed Services Committee, both the majority and the minority members, for sticking to their guns and fighting to preserve this process. I only wish that the leadership in the other body would have been as cooperative and as perhaps understanding as I think the Members in this body were. The Secretary of Defense could have gone a lot further and done a great deal more to assist the process instead of trying to thwart it.

Many of the items within the authorization bill in the conference bill are good and necessary. I follow with the gentleman from Missouri in stating the need for a reorganization of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and that basic reform.

I think they can go a lot further and there will be continued efforts in the next few years to allow that process to go forward.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the arms control language is a step in the right direction, for instance, the ASAT language.

I applaud the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] for the work on the GI bill. I would like to personally thank the leadership of the committee and the staff for working very closely with the staff and members of the House Committee on Intelligence, and for their cooperation in working with us to maintain the high priority that adequate intelligence should play and must play in our defense policy.

● Mr. APPLEGATE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to bring to the attention of my colleagues a section of the Defense authorization bill, section 1525, which strongly urges the President to seek a full accounting of the POW/MIA's from the Vietnam conflict.

Over the past 11 years, our Government has attempted to resolve the haunting issue of the still unaccounted 2,482 servicemen. Unfortunately, most of our efforts have not been successful. For the families, this has meant living in a state of limbo by not knowing what happened to their fathers, husbands, brothers, or friends.

I am pleased that we have added language in the compromise bill which reaffirms our commitment in obtaining the fullest, possible accounting. However, I regret the fact that the compromise language is not as strong as the language contained in my resolution (H.J. Res. 489) which directs rather than strongly urge the President to secure an accounting. I also regret that we, in the House of Representatives, have not had an opportunity to debate this issue in our Chambers nor take a vote on this important issue.

I have come to greatly sympathize with the families. And I have worked hard to gain approval of my resolution because I believe directing the President to secure an accounting to be in the best interests of the missing men and the families without endangering any current negotiations by our Government to resolve this issue.

For the 304 Members of the House, I want to thank them for cosponsoring my resolution. This type of support clearly shows that we are deeply concerned about the fate of our missing servicemen.

Mr. Speaker, I would also be remiss if I did not thank my colleague in the U.S. Senate, Senator JAMES EXON of Nebraska, for adding this language in the Defense authorization bill. When his amendment was offered, I am pleased to add, it was unanimously accepted.

Congress must remain involved in the POW/MIA issue. As a nation, we must stand behind our fighting men and women. We must also keep faith with them and their families. I, personally, will continue my efforts to see that an accounting is made and this issue put to rest once and for all.

Mr. Speaker, I call upon my colleagues to support section 1525 of the Defense authorization bill. The nations of Indochina must know that we want our boys back home.●

● Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the compromise contained in the fiscal year 1985 Defense Authorization Conference Report regarding antisatellite weapons. The compromise includes modification of the restriction on antisatellite [ASAT] weapon testing approved by the House earlier this summer. My colleagues may recall that the House approved an amendment authored by myself, and my colleague Representative LAWRENCE COUGHLIN and others prohibiting the testing of the U.S. ASAT weapon against an object in space as long as the Soviet Union did not resume testing to its ASAT weapon. The purpose of the amendment was to establish a mutual test moratorium in order to enhance the chances of initiating ASAT arms control negotiations.

Mr. Speaker, although I had the privilege of being named a special conferee to the Defense Conference Committee, I have not signed the conference report because I do not endorse the ASAT compromise. This compromise allows the Department of Defense to conduct two successful tests of the ASAT weapon. This is virtually a license for the Department of Defense to conduct as many tests as it pleases. This is absolutely contrary to the spirit of mutual restraint which I sought to establish by my amendment in order to enhance the prospects for arms control negotiations.

Finally, the Congress may not even have the opportunity to review the Presidential certification requirements provided by the amendment before testing begins. The compromise requires that only 15 calendar days elapse following certification by the President that he is endeavoring to negotiate with the Soviet Union before the first test against an object in space is allowed. The original Senate language required that 30 legislative days elapse before testing could begin.

Mr. Speaker, this summer I solicited the opinions of a number of experts on the subject of a mutual ASAT test moratorium. Although this was by no means a scientific poll, I think my colleagues will be interested in the views expressed in the responses I received. These letters confirm my view that a test moratorium is a critical ingredient to progress on ASAT negotiations.

I include excerpts from these letters for the RECORD below:

William Colby: Former Director, Central Intelligence Agency

I thorougly endorse your proposal that we refrain from testing our ASAT against objects in space so long as the Soviet Union does not resume its tests.

Hugh D. Dewitt: Staff Physicist, Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory

I am strongly in favor of a moratorium on ASAT testing and negotiations toward a treaty that will stop ASAT deployment.

Sidney Drell: Deputy Director, Stanford Linear Accelerator Center; consultant to the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence and to the National Security Council

I support a moratorium on ASAT tests as a way of starting the process and working toward more comprehensive negotiations while we still have time and before "the cat is out of the bag" on further weaponization of space.

Raymond L. Gartoff: Member, SALT I Delegation; former Deputy Director, Bureau of Politico-Military Affairs, Department of State; Senior Fellow, Brookings Institution

I strongly agree that it would be in the security interest of the United States to ban ASATs, and, as an immediate step, to refrain from testing ASATs so long as the Soviet Union does so. Such a reciprocal restraint would be unilaterally verifiable. A more formally agreed mutual verifiable moratorium could follow, as the first step in negotiation of a formal ASAT ban (preferably) or limitation. I hope the House mutual moratorium measure will be accepted by the Conference Committee and the Congress.

Richard L. Garwin: IBM Fellow, Thomas J. Watson Research Center; Member, President's Science Advisory Committee (1962-65, 1969-72); Member, Defense Science Board (1966-1969)

I thoroughly support . . . a mutual [ASAT] moratorium, which would require simply a commitment by the President to accept the ASAT moratorium offered August, 1983, by General Secretary Andropov, and restated 6/29/84 by General Secretary Chernenko. . . . I firmly support the wisdom of amending the Defense Authorization Bill to prevent our testing ASATs against objects in space, as long as the Soviet Union does not resume testing.

Carl Kaysen: Deputy Assistant for National Security Affairs, Kennedy Administration

I share your views that it is in the U.S. national interest and a positive contribution to our national security to observe such a [ASAT] mutual moratorium and to begin serious negotiations with the Soviet Union for a verifiable prohibition of such tests as soon as possible . . . even if there are political obstacles to negotiations, our capacity to monitor Soviet tests of anti-satellite weapons is such as to justify our refraining from such tests so long as the Soviets do so.

Henry W. Kendall: Professor of Physics, Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Chairman, Union of Concerned Scientists

I fully support a U.S.-Soviet moratorium on the testing of ASATs against objects in space. Having studied this issue in depth, I firmly believe that an ASAT test moratorium would serve as one of the most important initiatives that could be taken by the United States and the Soviet Union at this time to enhance the prospects of arms control and to foster an improvement in U.S.-Soviet relations.

Franklin Long: Professor of Chemistry Emeritus, Cornell University; former Associate Director, ACDA; former Member, President's Science Advisory Committee

I think that a test moratorium and similar moratoria are most useful when they are done as part of a longer range plan, in this case to try to negotiate a treaty. The fact that the Soviets did announce such a test moratorium makes it easy for the U.S. to wake up to the possibility of a moratorium quite straightforwardly, since they already know the Soviet position.

Carson Mark: former Head, Theoretical Division, Los Almos National Laboratory

Briefly, and without reservation, I strongly favor a mutual moratorium as against continued testing pending favorable outcome of "good faith" efforts to begin negotiations.

Wolfgang K.H. Panofsky: Director, Stanford Linear Accelerator Center; former member, General Advisory Committee, U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency (ACDA)

I support. . . a mutually agreed, open-ended moratorium forbidding the testing and deployment of ASAT components and systems unless the other side engages in such activities first. I believe such a measure would have merit in forestalling tests and deployments which might overtake diplomatic efforts aimed at securing an ASAT treaty.

Carl Sagan: Professor of Astronomy and Space Sciences and Director, Laboratory for Planetary Studies, Cornell University

I am very much in agreement with your view that a mutual ASAT test moratorium is important. . .

Pete Scoville: President, Arms Control Association; formerly Assistant Director ACDA; former deputy director for research CIA

Our future security and economic interest lie in a mutual halt on all ASAT tests. . . Now is the time for reciprocal national restraint and for serious negotiations to stop this new space race before the opportunity is irretrievably lost. There is no more important goal than a comprehensive ban on the testing and deployment of all space weaponry.

Jeremy J. Stone: Director, Federation of American Scientists

It seems to us [Federation of American Scientists] that an ASAT test moratorium is probably a necessary and a sufficient condition for successful ASAT negotiations . . . All in all, the case for a moratorium has, perhaps, never been stronger from the point of view of U.S. national interest.

Kosta Tsipis: Professor of Physics and Co-Director Program in Science & Technology for International Security, Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Member, Board of Directors, Council for a Livable World

I think it [An ASAT test moratorium] is a timely and measured step that will maintain open the option of negotiating a ban on testing and deployment of ASAT weapons.

Frank Von Hippel: Professor, Public Policy & International Affairs, Princeton University; Chairman, Federation of American Scientists

I am very much in favor of verifiable mutual moratoria on the testing of new destabilizing weaponry. It is my belief that ASAT weapons are destabilizing and that a moratorium on their testing against targets in space would be adquately verifiable.

Paul Warnke: Former Director, ACDA; chief U.S. negotiator, SALT II; U.S. negotiator, 1978 U.S.-Soviet ASAT talks; former Assistant Secretary of Defense for International Security Affairs

I find it impossible to understand how the development of sophisticated ASAT systems would be anything other than detrimental to our national security . . . As your letter points out, a test moratorium would both improve the negotiating climate and be, in itself, a valuable de fact agreement . . . I am convinced that a reciprocal moratorium is needed to prevent the taking of irrevocable steps to proceed with ASAT development. If such steps are not prevented, we, and our decendents, will look back bitterly at a lost opportunity.

John Steinbruner: Director, Brookings Institution

I agree with your judgment that a treaty banning further development of antisatellite weapons is in the security interests of the United States and that restraint on testing of the U.S. system is an important, even necessary condition both for negotiating such a treaty and for providing an informal substitute in the meantime.●

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of title 17 of the conference report on the defense authorization bill for fiscal year 1985. This title incorporates the provisions of a bill I introduced with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GLICKMAN] to establish a National Academy for Peace and Conflict Resolution.

The inclusion of this program in this defense authorization bill is the successful culmination of a multiyear effort to secure enactment of peace academy legislation. I want to commend the hard work of Mr. GLICKMAN and the conferees for accepting the Senate amendment. Considering recent terrorist activity and tensions throughout the world, this important program could not have come at a better time.

The provisions in this conference report presented to the House today is a compromise, hammered out by the conferees, between the House bill and the amendment added in the Senate. The compromise maintains the powers and duties of the Peace Institute, as outlined in both the House and Senate bills, but decentralizes the manner in which those activities will be carried out. It's not what we wanted in the beginning, but I am pleased with the proposal brought here for approval today.

Mr. Speaker, it's ironic, but important, that a program to study peace is finally approved in a bill that is primarily designed to procure weapons and support military efforts. However, these two seemingly contrary programs are in fact closely related. Enhancing our ability to understand conflict and to reduce its reliance on military power alone must be a key component of our efforts to maintain national security.

The concept of a Peace Academy is a pragmatic move. It recognizes that the answer to growing world tensions is not limited to military might alone. I agree—we need an adequate defense for protection and deterrence. However, this military might alone does not give us any assurances of lasting peace. Indeed, the establishment of a Peace Institute would not mean the denial of war, but rather an acknowledgment that conflict can and should be managed to minimize that risk. As the Peace Academy Commission report also noted: "Peace requires knowledge, judgment, and skill no less complex than which is required by war."

I urge my colleagues to support this important section of the conference report. When this country spends billions on war, it's crucial that we make an effort to study peace and conflict resolution.●

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the conference report on H.R. 5167, the Department of Defense authorization bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will take 1-minute speeches, if any Members desire to address the House at this time.

THE PLIGHT OF THE FAMILY FARMER

(Mr. McCURDY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Speaker, the other evening I had requested 1 hour of special order time in order to address the House regarding the plight of agriculture in America. Since that evening, when I was joined by a number of my colleagues discussing the plight of the farmer, not only in my district in Oklahoma but throughout the country, we have been receiving numbers of letters from farmers and people interested in agriculture expressing their concern and support for the effort in the elevation of this issue to the American public.

As we approach the end of this session and look for the next term when we will be addressing the 1985 farm bill, which will be the guidance for future farm legislation, I think it is important that all Members of the House, whether they represent an urban or suburban district or rural or agricultural district, to continue to remember the importance of agriculture to the entire economy, not only just in the rural areas but in the shopping centers, the supermarkets, those stores where consumers are confronted with agriculture on a daily basis.

As I stated, Mr. Speaker, the other evening, when people are concerned about the price of bread, and they pay $1.09 for a loaf of bread, they should remember that the farmer only receives 13 cents of that price, and that the price that the farmer receives is too low under today's costs in order to allow him to make a living.

We have to continue to stress to the American public, Mr. Speaker, that when we lose, and if we lose the family farm, then we have destroyed the most productive sector of the entire American economy.

Once they are gone, they will not return.

So, again, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join in urging the sense of the entire Congress, that we will unify and work together to develop an adequate farm policy that allows the farmer to make an adequate profit on his commodity, for food and fiber and, at the same time, to work to reduce the deficits of the U.S. Government, in order to reduce the interest rates and those costs which have cost the farmers so very much in the last few years.

Mr. Speaker, again I appreciate the concern that my colleagues have stressed and hope that through the next few days and as we go into the next session, next year, we will try to work, on a bipartisan basis, to develop an adequate farm policy.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

WARRANTIES ON DEFENSE PRODUCTS

(Mr. LEVINE of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, last year both Houses of Congress enacted a very strong and much-needed law providing for warranties on defense products.

We have seen, ever since the enactment of that law, a full-scale assault against it by the Reagan administration. Initially, they sought to repeal the warranty law outright and, subsequently, after it became clear to that administration that it was politically unpalatable to attempt an outright repeal, they tried in every way that this administration could, to drive loopholes through that law that were so large that an MX missile could be put through one of those loopholes.

Unfortunately, the administration has had some successes in the past several days, both via the Committee on Appropriations process and the authorization process, on the warranty legislation.

A critical vote will be occurring today in the full Committee on Appropriations with regard to the warranty legislation.

The administration convinced a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, by a 6 to 5 vote several days ago, to enact language that, according to the chief procurement officer of the U.S. Navy, would significantly weaken the warranty legislation.

That language, which essentially eliminates performance standards completely on all defense items, will be up today for a vote in the full Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. Speaker, this warranty law was enacted last year on a bipartisan basis with extensive support on both sides of the aisle for meaningful, tough warranties which will save the taxpayers of this country billions of dollars and, most significantly, which will insure our brave soldiers and sailors that the weapons that they are given to fight in battle work as they are supposed to work.

If the language that the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriation approved is approved by the full Committee on Appropriations, we will see business as usual with regard to defense warranties; we will see the taxpayer, again, footing the bill with regard to significant cost overruns; and we will see soldiers and sailors receiving weapons that they have no assurance will work.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that our colleagues on the Committee on Appropriations will reverse the action of the subcommittee, and restore a tough warranty law. I hope that the people on both sides of the aisle will continue to pursue the vigilant fight fought by them successfully last year which enabled us to draft and pass a meaningful warranty law, and that we will continue to do all that we can on both sides of the aisle to insure that that law stays strong and that the loopholes that this administration has been seeking are rejected.

WELCOME TO GUNN McKAY

(Mr. NIELSON of Utah asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce my good friend, Gunn McKay, who served as a Congressman here for 10 years from 1970–1980. He then served as mission president in Glasgow, Scotland, for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. He is visiting with us today. Though we are on opposite sides of the aisle politically we have always been friends. We worked together in the Utah State Legislature when he was an aide to Gov. Calvin Rampton and I was majority leader.

For my colleagues who know Gunn McKay, it would be good to renew their acquaintance and visit with him.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. MURPHY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, we are delayed awaiting papers from the Senate on the conference report on the Child Abuse Prevention Act.

As soon as it arrives, we are prepared to submit the conference report.

A TRIBUTE TO KATHALEEN C. ARNESON

(Without objection, Mr. MURPHY was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, in July of this year the community of those who work on behalf of the rights of disabled persons lost a dedicated and hardworking advocate. Kathaleen Arneson was well known on the Hill through her work with the Office of Legislation and Congressional Relations at the Rehabilitation Services Administration for 21 years. Following her retirement in 1981, she kept active as a volunteer for disability rights. She was instrumental in the establishment of the League of Disabled Voters, and worked particularly hard for the passage of the recent handicapped voters' accessibility legislation. Kay Arneson is truly missed by the many people who knew and respected her and who worked with her on disability issues for so many years.

The following biography, which was printed for a memorial service in her honor, illustrates Kay Arneson's outstanding career in public service:

Kathaleen C. Arneson, dedicated parent and grandparent, public servant and extraordinary volunteer, died July 17, 1984, of a sudden heart attack. A graduate of the State University of South Dakota and the University of Minnesota and an intern at the National Institute of Public Affairs in 1940 and a Rockefeller Fellowship winner in 1940–41, she began her Federal Security Agency service as Assistant for Wartime Social Planning (1940–42) and the President's War Relief Control Board at State from 1943 to 1947 as Program Assistant in International Welfare Planning. From 1951 to 1960 she was a volunteer as a Foreign Service wife following, from 1947 to 1951, U.S. Children's Bureau service as Special Assistant on Legislation. Then from 1960 to 1981 she served as Director of Legislation and Congressional Relations in the Rehabilitation Services Administration with interim assignments as Executive Director of the National Commission on Architectural Barriers; Temporary Director, Architectural and Transportation Barriers Compliance Board and as Interim Director of the Federal Interagency Committee on the International Year of Disabled Persons.

Following retirement from Federal Service, she devoted her considerable energies and expertise as Legislative Liaison for the League of Disabled Voters, Chairman of the Legislative Committee on the Women's Task Force of the National Rehabilitation Association (NRA), Volunteer Task Force Member of the NRA, Executive Committee and Vice Chair of the People to People Committee for the Handicapped and as an advisor to key members of the U.S. Congress on rehabilitation affairs.

At the time of her death, she held active memberships in the American Coalition of Citizens with Disabilities, the NRA, the League of Disabled Voters, the American Foreign Service Assn., the American Foreign Service Assn., Women's Assn., the Public Members Assn. of Foreign Service, the National Women's Political Caucus and the Women's National Democratic Club, and St. Augustine's Church.

"Her hard work and diligence in getting legislation passed by the Congress is unsurpassed in the history of Vocational Rehabilitation . . ." (From the nomination of Kay Arneson for the Meritorious Service Award of the President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURPHY] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ERLENBORN] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURPHY].

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, today we are here to consider the adoption of the conference report regarding the reauthorization of our Nation's child abuse prevention programs.

Nineteen months ago, my colleague from Illinois, JOHN ERLENBORN, and I carefully coauthored H.R. 1904 to combat all aspects of child abuse and neglect. In a bipartisan effort, we began 3 years ago with hearings that revealed situations now commonly known as Baby Doe cases. Prior to that we heard from experts regarding institutional abuse and sexual abuse problems. Finally, last year we focused on the relationship between a family's economic problems and the risks of child abuse. We've traveled down a long road of deliberations, hearings, and compromises. I am happy to say that this conference report positively reflects the efforts of each minute we labored.

This legislation is divided into three titles. Title I addresses child abuse and neglect prevention and protections. The major provisions are threefold. First, the definition of sexual abuse has been rewritten to conform with a 1982 Supreme Court ruling. No longer will acts or simulations of a sexual nature involving minors be interpreted differently in various parts of our country because of varying local obscenity interpretations. Now all acts or simulations with minors falls under sexual abuse.

Second, out of home care—such as day care, foster home care, and institutional care—is now covered under this act. No longer will those who are not legal guardians, but care for children away from the traditional family setting, be free to abuse their authority and abuse our Nation's children. We guarantee protection for our children, regardless of where they are, regardless of who has custody of them.

Lastly, this title establishes parameters within which the care of infants is addressed. No longer will we have to second guess medical decisions and burden parents who simply want to make the best decision possible. By working with nearly all of those involved in the medical community, the disability organizations, and those who advocate the child's right of life, we have constructed a mechanism to address so-called Baby Doe cases.

The conference report contains a definition of the infants covered as being those "at risk with life-threatening conditions." It further defines what constitutes "withholding of medically indicated treatment" so that guidelines can be established within hospitals regarding the treatment of such cases. Hospitals, if they so choose, may also establish their own local review mechanism so that each case may be given the individual attention its uniqueness requires. These procedures will complement existing State reporting practices, and no direct Federal intervention is required under this act.

In an effort to assist States, the Department of Health and Human Services, through the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect, will provide grants, technical assistance, research, and training for all aspects of child abuse and neglect. This conference report even provides for a maximum 2-year waiver of State requirements, other than the Baby Doe requirements, for those States that presently do not qualify for Federal funding. We believe that those States which are making a good-faith effort to meet minimum standards should not be penalized while State legislation is pending. We expect every State to receive Federal funding, and we intend to place an emphasis on prevention, education, and services.

Title II consists of provisions which facilitate the adoption of children with special needs, particularly disabled infants with life-threatening conditions. It establishes a national adoption and foster care data-gathering and analysis system. The HHS Secretary will coordinate efforts to improve State legislation with national, State, and local child and family services organizations, including organizations representative of minorities and adoptive families. Furthermore, corporations and small businesses are encouraged to support adoption as a postive family-strengthening option, including the establishment of adoption benefit programs for employees who adopt children. Finally, we will study the effects and success of nonlicensed entities that place children in adoptive homes. In short, our emphasis is on special needs or hard to place children.

Title III addresses the dramatic increase of family violence. I am pleased to report that this title has been agreed upon by both House and Senate conferees. It provides funding for shelters that many need, but few can use. In Pennsylvania alone, nearly 2,000 women and over 3,000 children were turned away last year from shelters which did not have the space to provide assistance. With nowhere to turn when a cooling off period is necessary, many have escaped to abandoned cars or condemned buildings with their children. Some have been forced to return to their abusive partner, thus suffering more severe abuse and even death. Sometimes, in order to save an entire family, we need to provide temporary housing for part of the family. This title does just that.

State demonstration grants will provide for abusers, victims, and their dependents a number of services such as shelter, counseling, self-help services, referrals for health care, food, clothing, emergency services, transportation, and child care. The Federal Government and local communities will split the cost of providing these services. At least 50 percent of the local share will be raised from private sources, thus insuring that support from organizations such as the Junior League, the United Way, and other fundraising activities continue. Moreover, funding distributions will be based on the population of each State with no entity receiving more than $50,000 in any one year. It is the intention of the conferees to provide as much service to as many victims in urban as well as rural areas. It is further the intent of the conferees to not only support and expand existing services, but to establish new shelters in areas not currently served.

The conference report recognizes that family violence victims come from all racial, ethnic, and socioeconomic backgrounds. Therefore, any individual regardless of age, sex, handicap, national origin, race, or color will be served, and that no income eligibility standards may be imposed for those who seek assistance. In conjunction with these antidiscriminatory provisions, elderly abuse is emphasized. A National Clearinghouse on Family Violence will be established to collect, disseminate, and analyze family violence statistics and information.

For all we've addressed in this legislation, for all whom we have protected or assisted, we only have a funding level of $49.5 million in fiscal year 1985. I urge my colleagues to think about the day care centers child abuse and family violence recently in the news. Sexual abuse and photographs of 3- and 5-year-olds. The two teenagers who were sentenced to prison terms because they killed an abusive father. Think of the women and children who live in fear because they have nowhere to seek help and assistance from a violent family situation. The cost in law enforcement services, judicial proceedings, and in human suffering far outweigh the modest package we have before us today.

I urge my colleagues to favorably consider this conference report and to support its adoption. In the Senate, Senators HATCH and DENTON have agreed with Senators KENNEDY and DODD.

In the House Chairman HAWKINS and I, together with all of our Democratic colleagues, have agreed with the ranking minority members, Mr. ERLENBORN and Mr. BARTLETT, together with all of our Republican colleagues, to unanimously support this measure and, together with all House and Senate conferees, have agreed on the content of this report.

I urge all of our members here today to join us in the adoption of the conference on H.R. 1904.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS].

Mr. HAWKINS. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 1904, the Child Abuse Amendments of 1984.

I would like to commend my colleagues on the Committee on Education and Labor, especially Mr. MURPHY, chairman of the Subcommittee on Select Education, Mr. MILLER, the chairman of the Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families, and Mr. ERLENBORN, the ranking minority member of the Committee on Education and Labor, for their concern and unflagging diligence to bring this carefully crafted conference report to the House floor. It was a tremendous effort on their part as well as on the part of many other concerned Members of both Chambers. Many months were spent working with representatives of the medical profession, health care facilitators, child advocacy groups, parents, and many others to develop this bipartisan compromise.

Public testimony and infomation received from local and State officials who provide social service programs, have shown a major correlation between the rising incidence of family violence, child abuse and neglect, and unemployment, lack of opportunities, and depressed economic conditions which contribute to the necessity for parents to obtain outside-the-home employment. This situation is especially severe for single heads of household who face the stressful and demanding concerns of financial security, child care, and other necessities by themselves, and who, statistically, make up the majority of the poor. While we work toward enactment of programs and policies which will enable people to improve their employability and have opportunities for work, we must find ways to reduce the conditions which contribute to family violence and child abuse.

This modest legislation is but one attempt to prevent these problems and to provide services to the victims of family violence.

This bipartisan legislation contains reauthorization through fiscal year 1987 of all the major statutory child abuse and neglect and adoption opportunities authorities; $158.1 million will be provided for these title I activities for the 4-year reauthorization period—fiscal years 1984 to 1987.

The legislation strengthens current laws in several ways. A particular provision with much merit is the creation of a new program authorizing $63 million to States over a 3-year period for matching grants to establish, maintain, or expand shelters for victims of family violence and to support efforts to prevent family violence; 60 percent of these funds will provide shelters and related assistance to victims of family violence including children. The remaining money will provide for family prevention programs. The provision for a study on the causes of family violence will be a valuable tool in formulating more effective programs.

There is an urgent need for this kind of assistance, as many of these family violence programs have not been able to continue the needed services as Federal funds have been cut back in title XX and VISTA, along with the elimination of the CETA program. New York, California, and other States show sharp increases and dramatic needs for family violence programs. I think this provision of this bill is long overdue, and it shall provide a much needed resource to augment those private and public agencies which are attempting to cope with these debilitating social needs.

Last, in addition to providing prevention programs and shelters for the victims of family violence, I consider the strengthening of the provision to prohibit age discrimination in the use of family violence funds as an important step in the right direction. Elderly abuse is often overlooked as we attempt to provide services for victims of family violence.

Mr. Speaker, these problems of child abuse and neglect are of deep concern to all Americans. This conference report represents many hours of laborious study and work by many Members of Congress. I believe that these efforts have produced a means by which we can address the problems of child abuse and neglect, improve and facilitate adoption opportunities, and help to prevent and reduce family violence. I would like to point out that when this bill was before the House in February of this year, it passed by an overwhelming vote of 396 to 4. I believe we have before us a report which is thoughtful and balanced and I urge my colleagues to support the conference report on H.R. 1904.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN].

Mr. MCCAIN. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference agreement on the Child Abuse Amendments of 1984. As one of the conferees on this legislation, I believe that the House-Senate conference agreement directly responds to the problem of child abuse and the overall problem of family violence.

Child abuse is a serious and extremely difficult problem with which to deal. Approximately 1.5 million children suffer from abuse each year. Of this figure, some 2,000 die as a result of direct injury. Even more alarming is that between 1976 and 1982, reports of child abuse and neglect nationwide have increased by 123 percent. The Federal Government has a role to play in combating this alarming trend. It should provide leadership, education, and training for the States, so that they may treat and prevent this problem.

My home State of Arizona is one of five States which does not currently qualify for Federal child abuse funds under the child abuse prevention and treatment grant requirements. I am currently working with State legislators and community leaders in designing a legislative package to provide protection for children, women, and the elderly in our State. I encourage all Members to work with their State and local legislators to achieve compliance with Federal guidelines. Many States, such as mine, have inadequate legislation to combat abuse and neglect. Legislation that addresses this issue is long overdue.

I would also like to inform the Members of the addition of title III to the act which establishes the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act of 1984. This act focuses attention on a new problem, that of elder abuse. Studies suggest that from 4 percent to 12 percent of the Nation's 26.8 million elderly suffer from some form of elder abuse.

Solutions to the problem of elder abuse may appear simple at first glance. The issue, however, is quite complex. Dealing with adults, the police are not likely to intervene without a personal complaint or request for help. Unlike an abused child who is seen by classmates and friends, the elderly do not attend school and are rarely seen out of the home. The chances of finding them are slim.

The legislation establishes a national clearinghouse on family violence which is directed to conduct research and disseminate information on the problems of abuse associated with the elderly. Grants will be made to the States for local community based organizations to threat and prevent family violence, including elder abuse.

Again, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation. Let's take the lead and put a stop to the rising incidence of child abuse and family violence.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING].

Mr. GOODLING. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise in support of and endorse the terms of the conference report on H.R. 1904, the Child Abuse Amendments of 1984.

Let me briefly comment on several provisions relating to the Adoption Opportunities Program that are now incorporated in the conference report.

I am very pleased to say that the language included in the House-passed version of H.R. 1904 maintaining the current emphasis, or targeting, on the adoption of "special needs" children has been retained in the conference report. Special needs children are those who are residing in foster homes or institutions, older youngsters—generally of school age, members of sibling groups, youngsters with physical, mental, or emotional handicapping conditions, as well as children from minority groups.

The conference report provides for a very limited expansion of the special needs category to include "disabled infants with life-threatening conditions" or Baby Doe infants. This change is a timely and appropriate one which I fully support.

The conference report provides for a 4-year reauthorization of the Adoption Opportunities Program at annual funding levels that should facilitate permanent adoption of more of these very deserving, but often forgotten, special needs children.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in voting to adopt this important conference report.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report accompanying H.R. 1904, the Child Abuse Amendments of 1984.

In particular, I take this time to commend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURPHY] the chairman of the subcommittee, who has been so diligent in pursuing these very complex issues, together with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ERLENBORN] the ranking member of the Committee on Education and Labor, who has also been diligent in the last 2 years in making sure that this House this late in the session finally adopts its child abuse report.

I am specifically supportive of the Baby Doe provisions in the conference agreement.

First, these provisions clarify a fundamental right: the right to live. The provisions reaffirm the rights of a disabled infant with life-threatening conditions to live—to be given treatment, food, water, and medication, unless:

The infant is chronically and irreversibly comatose;

Treatment would not ameliorate or correct the life-threatening conditions;

Treatment would simply prolong dying; or

Treatment would be futile and inhumane.

Yet, it is my understanding, that even in these tragic circumstances, such an infant would not be automatically denied food and water.

Second, these Baby Doe provisions are precedent setting. They represent the first time that we have successfully legislated in a very sensitive area—

We have indicated that we are interested in hospital policy and physician practice pertaining to treatment and care of disabled infants with life-threatening conditions;

We have accepted the central role of the attending physicians in treatment decisions;

We have recognized and endorsed the value of coordinating resources to assist families and physicians concerned and responsible for such infants; and

We have reaffirmed the role of State child protective service agencies in protecting the lives of such infants when neglect is reported.

Third, these Baby Doe provisions preserve congressional credibility. We have mandated change. States must have a reporting system in place for reporting cases of medical neglect within 1 year of enactment of these amendments. The Secretary of Health and Human Services is authorized to make grants to States: To develop and implement such reporting procedures; to provide information, education, and training programs related to such reporting procedures; and to establish and operate programs to coordinate services associated with medical, social, and financial assistance for families with infants with life-threatening conditions. Such help for States may be through technical assistance grants to public or private nonprofit organizations. The Secretary must provide this assistance within 210 days of enactment of these amendments.

In addition, within specified timelines of 60 and 180 days of enactment of these amendments, the Secretary must develop interim and final guidelines respectively to encourage within health-care facilities, the establishment of committees to educate hospital personnel and families with disabled infants with life-threatening conditions, to recommend institutional policies related to withholding of medically indicated treatment, and to offer counsel and review in cases involving disabled infants with life-threatening conditions.

A specific authorization of appropriation is provided to assist States to respond to the reporting requirements. Furthermore, the Secretary is authorized to use discretionary funds to provide for technical assistance grants and contracts.

These provisions are concrete, not symbolic. They reflect that we are committed to promoting increased attention to, awareness of, and help for disabled infants with life-threatening conditions, their families, and their physicians.

Fourth, in drafting the Baby Doe provisions, consensus among diverse groups and interests was essential. The right-to life-groups, the advocates for the disabled, and the medical community had equal roles in reacting to and recommending legislative language. They support the provisions in H.R. 1904. Their willingness to talk to each other, to negotiate with each other and to educate us is a reflection of their commitment to, and belief in, the viability of the legislative process—even if in uncharted waters.

Finally, the Baby Doe provisions in H.R. 1904 represent an appropriate balance and emphasis. As the result of this legislation, more infants will be saved because physicians will have guidelines and counsel rather than oversee, and more families will help because resources will be identified and coordinated.

I urge my colleagues to support the conference agreement on H.R. 1904 especially because of the carefully crafted and widely supported Baby Doe provisions.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BIAGGI].

Mr. BIAGGI. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURPHY], the chairman of the subcommittee, and the ranking minority Member, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ERLENBORN] who has been so critical in the development of this legislation, not simply today but over the years.

Mr. Speaker, as a cosponsor of H.R. 1904 and a member of the conference committee which produced this conference report, I urge its prompt adoption by the House today. In my judgment, we are doing far more than reauthorizing the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act for 4 years. We are, in fact, renewing our commitment to fight the scourge and horror of child abuse and neglect with actions rather than just with words.

Yet, in reality, the conference report to H.R. 1904 goes well beyond addressing the issue of child abuse. It in fact recognizes and responds to one of the most disturbing problems in American society today—the problem of family violence. For the first time, we have directed specific funds for family violence prevention in title III of this bill to assist its victims—who are of all ages.

I was a Member of this body in 1974 when the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act was first enacted. I was a proud original sponsor of the measure. It was considered a landmark law at that time—for it was the first time the Federal Government had responded to this problem. I remember the first bill I authored as a newly elected Member of the House in 1968 was a Child Abuse Prevention Act, and I have worked on the legislation ever since.

Today as we evaluate the effectiveness of the Child Abuse Act over its 10-year history, we can only give it mixed reviews. It has been crippled by a chronic lack of adequate funding to meet the growing challenges associated with child abuse prevention. Yet despite this major shortcoming, progress has been made—we find its programs have developed an important base of supportive prevention and treatment efforts to deal with this problem. We have seen a dramatic increase in the number of cases of child abuse being reported from 10 years ago.

Yet, as we complete this reauthorization process, we see that far from abating, the child abuse problem is in fact proliferating in this Nation. In 1982 alone, more than 929,000 cases were reported nationwide. The challenge was before Congress to beef up the child abuse law and make it work. I believe we have done that and more.

Let me address myself to several key features of this bill. Under H.R. 1904, we have expanded the definition of child abuse to include acts by a person who is an employee of a residential facility or any person providing out-of-home care including day care. This responds directly to shocking reports of child abuse, including sexual abuse of children in federally funded day care centers. It is not a hypothetical problem—it is a clear and present threat to an increasing number of children. In New York City alone there have been 77 reported cases of child abuse in day care centers—just in the first 7 months of 1984. With this bill we broaden the scope of our prevention efforts and hopefully assure that we extend protective services to children outside the confines of the home.

I realize that is only one dimension—but it is an important one. Emotionally, we want to go after the abusers—but our response proves wanting unless we care for the victims. Ultimately, we must condition future Federal aid to States having programs under which all day care centers are licensed and employees screened. This approach is embodied in legislation I have sponsored, H.R. 6207, that would condition the more than $750 million we now spend in Federal funds on day care to meet these standards. I applaud the House action yesterday in approving the Miller amendment providing $50 million to States to improve training of day care personnel.

Another important feature of this conference agreement is the amendment I was proud to sponsor calling for a first-time study establishing the relationship between child abuse and the nonpayment of child support. This amendment grew out of field hearings I conducted which indicated that the nonpayment of child support represented a form of economic child abuse which claimed more than 13 million children as victims. I was proud to be in attendance earlier this year when President Reagan signed into law the Child Support Enforcement Amendments of 1984 aimed at improving our abilities to collect delinquent child support payments. I view this amendment to be complementary to that effort and look forward to the recommendations which will eminate from the study.

I was proud to have played a lead role in the enactment of title III of this conference report—the Family Violence Prevention and Treatment Act. This provision earmarks $63 million to programs and services aimed at helping the victims of family violence. These include the victims of elder abuse. As an original member of the House Select Committee on Aging which has done extensive work in this area, it is time that we recognized that abuse is an intergenerational problem. I developed two provisions in title III which will help ensure services reach the victims of elder abuse. First in the definition of family violence, elder abuse is included. Second, there is a nondiscrimination provision to guarantee that seniors are not turned away from shelters because of their age. One other related feature—under 1904 a national incidence study on the problem of elder abuse is called for which will help us a great deal in the allocation of future resources.

Another important feature of title III is the $2 million authorized for the training of law enforcement personnel in order to assist them in responding to incidents of family violence. This technical support is critical for local agencies who too often fail to work for appropriate coordination within their communities to assure the most effective and efficient responses to these types of problems. These funds will provide law enforcement agencies with the resources to assist them in this effort and recognizes the especially important role of these officials in prevention efforts.

Let me finally express my full support for the authorization increases provided in this bill. A total of $158.1 million is provided through fiscal year 1987 of which not less than $9 million is available per year for State grants and a floor of $11 million is available each year for research demonstration and information dissemination activities.

Let me note that I would hope that this increased emphasis on information dissemination would see an effort to replace the functions of the regional resource centers that were phased out last year. These centers provided valuable technical assistance to protective service personnel and I hope that the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect would agressively work to replace the activities of these centers.

At this point, let me pay tribute to the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. MURPHY, whose leadership has been outstanding throughout this long and difficult process. Also full committee Chairman HAWKINS who has helped a great deal in conference and all the House and Senate conferees who like myself are proud of this legislation we put forth today.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise to urge my colleagues to pass the conference report on H.R. 1904, the Child Abuse Amendments of 1984.

Today we have the opportunity to vote on legislation which addresses some of the more troubling problems facing America's children and families.

It is a credit to both bodies and to our leader, Mr. MURPHY, that we've been able to take the difficult areas of child abuse, sexual abuse, family violence, and disabled infants at risk and deliver a responsible legislative response to the American people.

We've seen that if we act early, we can stop the cycle of family violence and we can help prevent the abuse and neglect of children. But help for State and local communities has been cut to the core. This legislation will bring necessary relief to State and local efforts, and will aid our research in this area.

This report, unanimously approved by the conference committee, reflects a truly bipartisan effort. Aware that child abuse reports have increased 123 percent since 1976, that child sexual abuse reports have increased 600 percent, and that shelters for abused women are turning away 8, 9, and 10 victims for every 1 they can take, conferees have recommended a significant commitment by the Federal Government to the victims of family violence.

I am pleased that the Child Abuse Amendments of 1984 will reauthorize this important program for 4 years and will provide additional assistance to States to address this deeply disturbing trend. I am also especially pleased that separate focus for the prevention and treatment of child sexual abuse, a program which I authored in the 1978 reauthorization but which was discontinued by the current administration, is reestablished and funded at $5 million for each of the 4 years. A new domestic violence program will provide modest Federal funding to help States assist family violence prevention and services projects.

THE CHILD ABUSE PROGRAM

I would like to highlight some of the areas where the conferees have strengthened the child abuse prevention programs. The definition of child abuse in the orginal act is amended to include employees of a residential facility or any staff person providing out-of-home care. Along with other efforts, this will help respond to the incidents of child sexual abuse in day care settings which have been so prevalent in recent news accounts. It will also address children who have been victimized in other institutional settings. The Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families and the Ways and Means Subcommittee on Oversight held a joint hearing on this subject last week and are working together to fashion additional responses.

We have made another effort to address abuse in institutional settings, including child care settings. The managers agreed that the Secretary of HHS should conduct a study of information sharing between child protective services and law enforcement agencies. Respecting the confidentiality of the parties involved, and the treatment versus prosecution roles of the respective agencies, has been a critical problem in various cases involving child abuse, and child sexual abuse especially. We hope this study will be helpful to States and localities in improving their information sharing.

H.R. 1904 reiterates the requirement in existing law that the Secretary of HHS collect and report statistics on the national incidence of child abuse and neglect. To date, that function has been carried out under contract with the American Humane Association [AHA]. Since 1976, AHA has provided annual incidence data on child abuse, based on State reports, that has permitted trends in this serious social problem to be identified. The very sharp increase in both child abuse reports, and actual cases, particularly sexual abuse cases, has been an important impetus for the conferees unanimous agreement to increase funding for the Federal Child Abuse Program. Not only has the AHA data forced us to acknowledge the increase in reports and actual cases, but it has added in our understanding that tragically, the severity of the cases has increased, and the age of the victimized child has lowered.

There is clear implication that the administration does not intend to continue to collect and report on child abuse statistics on an annual basis. The contract with AHA will end shortly, has not been renewed, and we have seen no indication that the adminstration plans to put it out for competitive bid. It is the intention of the conferees, however, that national incidence statistics continue to be collected and compiled. To establish the presence of critically important trends. It is imperative that statistics on the national incidence of child abuse and neglect be compiled on an annual basis. The welfare of abused and neglected children absolutely depends upon it.

THE BABY DOE PROVISIONS

H.R. 1904 includes an effort to address the highly complex problem of medical treatment for disabled infants with life-threatening conditions.

These are terribly sensitive issues which emerge at a time in parents' lives when they are experiencing grief and emotional trauma. Physicians caring for their offspring are also under enormous pressure at these times. Legislative remedies are often not able to respond adequately to these troubling situations. Nevertheless, the conferees have crafted a compromise in this ethically difficult matter which reflects the careful contribution of disability rights groups, medical and other health professionals, and deliverers of health care, and child advocates.

FOCUS ON CHILD SEXUAL ABUSE

H.R. 1904 reestablishes a special focus on the problem of child sexual abuse. No other problem that so painfully affects children has so rapidly come out of the shadows and into our awareness. The American Humane Association states there has been a 600-percent increase in sexual abuse reports since 1976. Sexual assault researchers report that anywhere from 1 in 10 to 1 in 3 adult women state they were sexually abused as children. Recent news accounts of sexual abuse in day care settings are the latest shocking development in this serious offense against our children.

To provide attention to the problem, and to encourage replication of successful family-oriented treatment models, I authored a separate sexual abuse treatment program within the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act. An important feature of the program was the establishment of child sexual abuse treatment centers which offered in-service training, as well as teaching meterials, to disseminate effective treatment models. One of those centers is in San Jose, CA, and is headed by Dr. Henry Giarretto, the founder of Parents United—a self-help group for sexually abusing parents. The San Jose Child Sexual Abuse Treatment/Training [CSATP] has treated over 5,000 sexually abused children and their families, and its training workshops have resulted in the establishment of 106 additional CSATP's. It is important to note that 90 percent of abusing fathers who participated in this program were able to stop abusing their children.

Other sexual abuse training centers were located in the States of Washington, Illinois, Pennsylvania, and Tennessee.

In 1981, the administration repealed the authority to fund these highly successful child sexual abuse training centers. Consequently, the dissemination of proven, effective treatment methods was curtailed at the very time when demand for these approaches was increasing.

H.R. 1904 restores Federal resources to combat child sexual abuse. The conferees highlight the special contribution that these training centers have made to address the problem of child sexual abuse.

THE FAMILY VIOLENCE PREVENTION AND SERVICES ACT

I am especially pleased that the conference committee has agreed that States should receive Federal assistance to provide shelters for abused women and their children. It has been an interest of mine since the matter first came to public attention in the late 1970's. My colleagues, Representatives LINDY BOGGS, BARBARA MIKULSKI, MARIO BIAGGI, and AUSTIN MURPHY, as well as many others, have labored long and hard to persuade the Congress to provide some measure of Federal assistance to local family violence projects.

With this legislation, Congress, for the first time, will be recognizing that the battering of women and children is a national problem requiring national solutions. We simply can no longer sweep the problem under the rug or pretend it is a private matter. What we are talking about here is crime—assault, battery, rape, and murder. And it is no less criminal if it is committed behind closed doors instead of out on the street.

Our legislation takes an important first step. It provides an immediate sanctuary. A safe haven for those women who flee in the middle of the night to protect their lives and the lives of their children.

As many as 6 million wives will be abused this year, with some 2,000 to 4,000 women beaten to death. We have heard testimony at our hearings before both the Select Education Subcommittee and the Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families about the terrible costs of family violence, about the fact that it affects rich and poor, young, and old, white, black, and Hispanic families.

The police understand the problem, they understand the impact of this crime. And they understand that about 40 percent of police injuries occur during responses to domestic complaints.

The Family Violence Prevention and Services Act provides $63 million, over 3 years, to assist States in developing, maintaining, and expanding family violence projects. While modest, the funding will provide critical support for grassroots family violence programs at a time when they are struggling to meet dramatic increases in demand for their services with seriously reduced resources. The Battered Women's Alternative, a program in my own community of Contra Costa County, CA, is an excellent example of a highly respected shelter program for abused women and their children, which works closely with voluntary and public agencies and law enforcement.

Let me highlight a few of the important features of our conference agreement on the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act.

Of the total funding, 85 percent will go to States, with no State receiving less than $50,000 in any single year. Of the funding received by States, 60 percent must support projects providing shelter services to family violence victims and referrals to related assistance such as family counseling, when appropriate.

Approximately $2 million each of the 3 years will be transferred to the Attorney General to train law enforcement officials in their response to instances of family violence. Remaining funds will be used by the Secretary to, among other things, conduct research into the causes, threatment, and prevention of family violence. The Secretary will also establish a national clearinghouse to collect, analyze, and report on the national incidence of family violence, and the provision of shelter services, and to disseminate information about available service models.

Local projects receiving assistance must match Federal funding with other non-Federal resources, including in-kind services, and including private support. Every consideration should be given to supporting new projects to aid communities currently without emergency shelter services for family violence victims.

Mr. Speaker, the conference report on H.R. 1904 is a bipartisan product forged in a true spirit of compromise. It has been unanimously approved by my colleagues on the conference committee. It reflects the support of child advocacy groups, sectarian and nonsectarian social service organizations, many women's groups, law enforcement organizations, medical and health associations, and other organizations such as the American Bar Association. I want to thank committee staff on both sides of the aisle, in both bodies, who have been especially diligent and cooperative in developing this legislation. I am especially appreciative of the continuing support and efforts of the organizations which worked closely with us to craft the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act. The list follows:

After much deliberation concerning the Child Abuse Program, and after literally years of effort on behalf of abused women and their children, the time has come to enact this important legislation into law. I urge my colleagues to pass the conference report on H.R. 1904.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the members of the committee, the minority side, and the staffs of both committees for their help in drafting this legislation.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PETRI].

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, this was a good bill when I initially cosponsored it. Since that time, the bill has gone through many changes as a variety of interested parties have added their contributions to it, first in our House Education and Labor Committee, then on the House floor, the Senate and, finally, the conference committee. At each step, this bill has become better. We now have before us a meaningful, workable act to combat child abuse and family violence.

Best of all, this bill includes careful requirements for State child abuse plans to protect handicapped newborns from intentional neglect and abuse, coupled with a Federal effort to facilitate finding a home for handicapped children who have been put up for adoption. Every human being must be assured the maximum possible protection against physical abuse, especially handicapped babies who cannot fight for their right to receive treatment and sustenance. No one, I repeat no one, has the right to play God with the lives of these babies except God himself. Once the survival of these handicapped newborns is assured, we should then help find these children a loving home. Experience shows that there are more than enough families who will gladly adopt these children if given the chance. Let us in Congress never underestimate the love and concern that individual Americans will give to those in need.

As much as I support this bill, speaking on its behalf is only one of the reasons I rise today. At this time I wish to observe that this, I believe, may be the last major bill to come before us that has been significantly shaped by the hand of the ranking Republican Member of the House Education and Labor Committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ERLENBORN]. After two decades of service in this House, Mr. ERLENBORN is retiring. During my tenure on the committee, I have learned from his experience, benefited from his wisdom, and enjoyed his wit. His presence will be sorely missed in the 99th Congress. I wish him well and thank him for his key contributions to the measure before us.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, let me thank my colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PETRI] for his kind remarks, and I would rush to yield him as much additional time as he would like if he would continue in that vein.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 1904, the Child Abuse Amendments of 1984 and to compliment the distinguished chairman of the Select Education Subcommittee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURPHY] for his excellent overview of the terms of the conference agreement.

My remarks will focus on those provisions that embody a necessary and timely reaffirmation of a national policy of full and equal rights for disabled infants with life-threatening conditions. These infants are often referred to as Baby Doe infants.

The first important change involves improved procedures for reporting medical neglect cases. Cases of medical neglect include instances in which medically indicated treatment has been withheld from disabled infants with life-threatening conditions.

In order to qualify for State grant funds under the Child Abuse and Neglect Act, State child protective services systems must develop and implement procedures which will facilitate proper reporting of medical neglect cases. These procedures must be operational within 1 year and provide for:

First, coordination and consultation with designated individuals within health care facilities;

Second, prompt notification by designated health care personnel of cases of suspected medical neglect; and

Third, authority under State law for a State's child protective services system to pursue legal remedies to prevent the withholding of medically indicated treatment from disabled infants with life-threatening conditions.

Importantly, the conference report specifically addresses the concerns of those who argued that the House version would force doctors and other health professionals to employ extreme or heroic measures to sustain a life, even if such treatment were futile. The conference report defines "withholding of medically indicated treatment" as the failure to respond to an infant's life-threatening conditions by providing treatment which, in the treating physician's or physicians' reasonable medical judgment, will be most likely to ameliorate or correct all of the infant's life-threatening conditions.

Specific exemptions from this definition and State medical neglect reporting requirements are also established. These exceptions include: When the infant is chronically and irreversibly comatose; when treatment would merely prolong dying; when treatment would not improve or correct the infant's conditions or be futile in terms of the infant's survival, and when treatment would be virtually futile in terms of the infant's survival and the treatment itself would be inhumane.

A new State implementation program is established to assist States in developing and operating programs or procedures for the prevention of medical neglect. States may use their implementation grant funds for information and education or training programs for personnel concerned with the well-being of disabled infants and their parents. Implementation moneys also may be used for programs to help obtain or coordinate necessary services for families of these infants. Lastly, funds may be used for services needed to facilitate adoptive placement of these infants.

The authorizations for all programs under the Child Abuse and Neglect Act have been increased substantially. For fiscal year 1984, the conference agreement provdes $33.5 million; $40 million in fiscal year 1985; $41.5 million in fiscal year 1986; and $43.1 million in fiscal year 1987. The conference agreement further provides that, from the sums authorized, $5 million is earmarked annually for the new State implementation grant initiative.

The Secretary of Health and Human Services is given new authorities and responsibilities in this important cooperative effort to provide additional protections and services to these babies. The Secretary must provide training and technical assistance to the States to assist them in developing and implementing programs and procedures to meet the new State medical reporting requirements. The Secretary is also required to establish and operate national and regional information and resource clearinghouses to provide the most current and comprehensive information regarding medical treatment procedures and resources as well as community resources for the provision of services and treatment for Baby Doe infants. Regional directories of community services and resources, including the names and telephone numbers of State and local medical organizations, must be compiled, updated, and disseminated to assist parents, families, and physicians, and to coordinate appropriate regional education resources for health-care personnel.

For these purposes, up to $1 million may be used annually from funds authorized for research and demonstration and other discretionary grant activities.

Finally, the conference agreement requires the Secretary to publish model guidelines to encourage the establishment within health care facilities of committees to educate hospital personnel and families of disabled infants with life-threatening conditions. These committees would recommend institutional policies and guidelines concerning the withholding of medically indicated treatment from such infants, offer counsel, and review cases involving Baby Doe infants.

Mr. Speaker, the disabled infants provisions incorporated in the conference report address a myriad of difficult social and ethical issues. The conference agreement is the product of months of painstaking deliberations. Members of both parties in both Houses gave generously of their time and effort, as did administration representatives and a host of experts from the medical, hospital, disability, and pro-life communities. There was an ongoing and open discussion of the issues and of alternative resolutions of these issues. No single point of view prevailed. The conference agreement represents the best efforts of many to afford additional and critical protections and services to Baby Doe infants. The disabled infants provisions of the 1984 Child Abuse and Neglect Act Amendments are a product of thoughtful and compassionate compromise.

Let me again commend by colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURPHY] as well as the distinguished chairman of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee [Mr. HATCH] and the chairman of the Subcommittee on Families [Mr. DENTON] for their steadfast commitment to bring this landmark legislation before both Houses of this Congress. A special word of thanks also goes out to all of the interested individuals and groups who have participated in developing this important measure. I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to join me in voting to adopt the conference report.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER].

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, since 1974, the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect [NCCAN] has provided support for an annual national data collection of reported cases of child maltreatment. It provides the only nationwide, hard data on the incidence of child abuse and neglect.

I was concerned to learn that funding has been provided for this national data collection effort only until the end of the year when the collection effort for fiscal year 1982 will be completed. So far, the Department of Health and Human Services has made no effort to assure that the 1983 data be collected and disseminated.

Last week the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families and the Ways and Means Oversight Subcommittee held joint hearings on child sexual abuse in day care settings. During the hearing witnesses testified about the importance of the reporting statistics. The 1982 report analyzes the trends in child abuse reporting since the early 1970's until the present. Since the data is collected from State agencies, it gives us a good sense of what is being reported to public agencies, how the cases are being handled, what proportion of the cases are being substantiated, where the reports are coming from, what kind of treatment services those families are getting, how many cases go to court, and what ages the children are. It provides critical information to policymakers at the State, local, and Federal levels who are seeking to combat child abuse and neglect.

Since its beginning, the American Humane Association has collected the national data. They have worked unceasingly with States which provide child abuse and neglect data voluntarily. Experts in the field testify that AHA has successfully helped States upgrade their reporting efforts and that the data has improved markedly over the last decade. The American Humane Association has been notified that their services will no longer be needed after the end of the year when the current data collection effort is completed.

If the intent of the administration is to offer the reporting system up to competitive bids, fair and square, I would not be concerned. However, we have no assurance that HHS will continue funding the data collection effort which is crucial to our efforts to fight child abuse and neglect. In fact, I am appalled that the administration's actions may indeed jeopardize the national data collection effort for the next year and may represent a reduced Federal commitment to this vital effort.

I must say that the excellent data collected and reported by the AHA has shown the very sharp increase in both child abuse reports and actual cases, especially sexual abuse cases. It has been an important impetus for the unanimous agreement of the conferees to increase Federal funding for the Federal child abuse program.

I too am concerned that it appears that the current administration does not intend to continue to collect and report on child abuse statistics on an annual basis. The contract with AHA will end soon, will not be renewed, and no further effort has been made to offer it to another organization or for competitive bidding to assure the continuity in reporting that is so important.

It is the intention of the House conferees that national incidence of abuse statistics continue to be collected and compiled on an annual basis. The welfare of abused and neglected children absolutely depends upon it.

My fear is that the national data collection effort will be terminated or downgraded. One way to avoid spending money on child abuse is to pretend that there is no longer a problem. One way that this administration has frequently achieved this is to stop collecting data. We have seen the data collection effort in the Federal Government come to a standstill in many vital areas. It gives me pause that the same could happen with the child abuse and neglect reporting system. I think it is important for the Department of Health and Human Services to realize how important Congress thinks this system is and that they take speedy action to assure the continuity of reporting that we all want and need.

Mr. Speaker, dealing with family violence is one of the great concerns I have, and I compliment this group for the wonderful piece of legislation they have come forward with, because it is so comprehensive. Starting the week of October 8, we will be focusing on family violence, a thing that we all deplore and are concerned about how it is growing. This bill is a very important step forward, so I really salute the committee for all the hard work they have put in.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for bringing this matter up.

We found that in our lengthy hearings during the past 2½ years that reports of child abuse and neglect have greatly increased by 123 percent in the past 3 years alone in the reporting.

child abuse under this legislation. The conference agreement expands the definition of child abuse to include withholding of medically indicated treatment of severely handicapped infants. Specifically the measure requires States receiving Federal child abuse prevention grants to incorporate programs and procedures to prevent medical neglect of handicapped infants into their existing child protection systems. Medical neglect would include withholding of medically indicated treatment from infants with life-threatening conditions.

The State procedures must include ways to ensure prompt reporting by doctors, nurses and other health care professionals of suspected medical neglect. Obviously the Child Abuse and Treatment Act to be most effective must continue to respond to the changing technological and scientific advances in our society by assuring that all children continue to receive protective services, especially when medical treatment is an appropriate intervention strategy that can be used to save a life. The right to life—for all children—is further enhanced by this legislation—which recognizing that children born with handicaps can and should be given every reasonable possibility for survival.

I also wish to note a special earmarking in this bill of $5 million each year for sex abuse prevention and treatment programs. It was the 1978 amendments to this act that expanded the definition of child abuse to include victims of sexual abuse—including those caught up in the vicious web of child pornography. H.R. 1904 continues this important emphasis. The bill also revises the definition of sexual abuse to more closely conform with recent court decisions including the important Ferber decision in New York, in order to assure all acts of exploitation are contained in this definition.

It should also be noted that no more than $1 million is authorized to be provided for training and technical assistance in order to assist in the implementation of the so-called Baby Doe provisions. When appropriations fall below $30 million, funds shall first be provided for the child abuse program through State grants and research and demonstrations. The remaining funds are to be equally divided between sexual abuse prevention and treatment programs and programs for medically neglected infants.

Let me address myself to several other key features of this bill. Under H.R. 1904, we have expanded the definition of child abuse to include acts by a person who is an employee of a residential facility or any person providing out of home care including day care. This responds directly to shocking reports of child abuse including sexual abuse of children in federally funded day care centers. It is not a hypothetical problem—it is a clear and present threat to an increasing number of children. In New York City alone there have been 77 reported cases of abuse in day care centers—just in the first 7 months of 1984. With this bill we broaden the scope of our prevention efforts and hopefully assure that we extend protective services to children outside the confines of the home.

I realize that is only one dimension—but it is an important one. Emotionally, we want to go after the abusers—but our response proves wanting unless we care for the victims. Ultimately, we must condition future Federal aid to States having programs under which all day care centers are licensed and employees screened. This approach is embodied in legislation I have sponsored, H.R. 6207, that would condition the more than $750 million we now spend in Federal funds on day care to meeting these standards. I applaud the House action yesterday in approving the Miller amendment providing $50 million to States to improve training of day care personnel.

Another important feature of this conference agreement is the amendment I was proud to sponsor calling for a first time study establishing the relationship between child abuse and the nonpayment of child support. This amendment grew out of field hearings I conducted which indicated that the nonpayment of child support represented a form of economic child abuse which claimed more than 13 million children as victims. I was proud to be in attendance earlier this year when President Reagan signed into law the Child Support Enforcement Amendments of 1984 aimed at improving our abilities to collect delinquent child support payments. I view this amendment to be complementary to that effort and look forward to the recommendations which will eminate from the study.

I was proud to have played a lead role in the enactment of title III of this conference report—the Family Violence Prevention and Treatment Act. This provision earmarks $63 million to programs and services aimed at helping the victims of family violence. These include the victims of elder abuse. As an original member of the House Select Committee on Aging which has done extensive work in this area, it is time that we recognized that abuse is an intergenerational problem. I developed two provisions in title III which will help ensure services reach the victims of elder abuse. First in the definition of family violence, elder abuse is included. Second, there is a nondiscrimination provision to guarantee that seniors are not turned away from shelters because of their age. One other related feature—under 1904 a national incidence study on the problem of elder abuse is called for which will help us a great deal in the allocation of future resources.

Another important feature of title III is the $2 million authorized for the training of law enforcement personnel in order to assist them in responding to incidents of family violence. This technical support is critical for local agencies who too often fail to work for appropriate coordination within their communities to assure the most effective and efficient responses to these types of problems. These funds will provide law enforcement agencies with the resources to assist them in this effort and recognizes the especially important role of these officials in prevention efforts.

These provisions are important in order to assure age-integrated services in communities. In response to a 1981 survey of 500 shelters nationwide, which I conducted in my capacity as Chairman of the Human Services Subcommittee of the House Aging Committee, we learned that many shelters cannot serve abused elders. First, they lack adequate resources. Second, they do not have adequately trained personnel that are able to provide services to abused elderly, whose needs are often vastly different from abused spouses.

In order to provide the benefits of funded research to the widest possible audience, the bill also establishes a National Center on Family Violence Prevention, which will collect and analyze data and disseminate the findings of research. I am pleased that two of the research mandates of the clearinghouse include provisions which I authored one, which will require a national incidence study to ascertain the extent of elder abuse in this country and two, which will examine the impact of mandatory reporting laws on adult protective services. Both these studies must be conducted in coordination with the National Institute on Aging and the Administration on Aging.

The issue of mandatory reporting has major implications for the effective prevention and treatment of elder abuse. To date, 27 States have laws which mandate the reporting of elder abuse. However, many researchers and service providers have argued that mandatory reporting has a negative impact upon individual elders and the aged as a group. In the indivdual case, according to a spring 1982 article in Family Law Review the existence of mandatory reporting will result in the invasion of traditional priviledged relationships between professionals and clients which could trigger solutions such as premature of unnecessary institutionalization or guardianship.

As a charter member of the Select Committee on Aging, I have long argued against the warehousing of

This absolutely encouraged our committee to tackle this problem with a great deal more sincerity and to devote more time to it.

It is our hope and it was the hope of the conferees that these statistics gathered by the American Humane Association would continue to be collected by the administration.

Only by focusing on the numbers and the massive amount of child abuse and particularly child sexual abuse that exists in our country have we been able to design the bill and go to conference and come out with a conference that we have. We cannot hope to combat child abuse unless we gather the statistics that give to all the law enforcement agencies and give to all the child welfare agencies nationwide the ability to cope with a problem of this magnitude.

When I visited Atlanta and discussed with the chief of police of Atlanta during the terrible incidents of the slayings they had, he told me that in the course of their investigation that they had a 500-percent increase in reported child sexual abuse, because they were trying to get to the core of solving a tremendous number of cases there and he said that he hoped that the Nation did not experience the magnitude of the reporting that he was now finding.

I thank the gentlewoman for bringing this to our attention.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his cooperation.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR].

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the chairman. I want to commend my friend, the gentlewoman from Maryland, BARBARA MIKULSKI, and the gentlewoman from Louisiana, LINDY BOGGS, and all those who worked on this.

The whole bill is important. I want to zero in on one little vignette of the bill that I thought was important enough to ask my dear colleague to add in, and he did, and that is the fact that we have to take a look at elder abuse as well. You know, one out of six elder Americans are abused and very often these are the kinds of crimes not reported. One of the reasons they are not reported is the intimidation and the psychological stress related to it. Very often they are done by families particularly where there is high unemployment so it is very important to have the data so that we can relate to a solution to this problem.

This is why I am especially pleased that as part of family violence we look at child abuse, we look at battered women in other areas, but we also look at something that is more subtle, but just as real, and that is the problem of elder abuse.

I thank my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, for adding that section to the bill and I am very, very pleased with it and I am pleased, in fact, with the whole bill and all the hard work that I think the gentlewoman from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI] and others have worked on for 7 or 8 years on this bill and to see it come to fruition is very, very important. It is an historic day.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI].

□ 1250

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. Speaker, the House acts best when it acts on a bipartisan basis. I would like to thank my colleagues on the House Education and Labor Committee for the wonderful work they have done on this legislation.

As a social worker, I witnessed firsthand the tragic impact that this problem has had on families of every social class and in every neighborhood. These experiences have made the prevention of child abuse and family violence a priority with me. I have been in the homes of the battered and the shelters who gave sanctuary.

This is why I came to Congress. As a social worker I could help 60 families. But with this legislation we can help nearly 6 million wives who are abused by their husbands each year; we can help those who have been victims of physical battery, the single major cause of injury to women, exceeding even rape and mugging.

We can help over 1 million children who are abused each year. We can also help the police who spend one-third of their time responding to family violence calls. Over 30 percent of the police killed in the line of duty are killed responding to these calls.

No wonder Hill Street is so blue.

These millions of victims, particularly women, children, and the elderly, live in danger, fear, and isolation. Most shelters provide immediate safety and services 24 hours a day yet the budget cuts at the State level and in title XX, CETA, and many other programs have resulted in 76 percent of the shelters reducing their services.

Now many shelters turn away 10 victims for every 1 they serve due to the lack of space. This legislation will provide important resources.

If we have money to provide shelters for the MX missile we surely should have money to provide shelters for families who have been battered.

I yield back the balance of my time.

● Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, as a cosponsor of H.R. 1904 and a member of the conference committee which produced this conference report, I urge its prompt adoption by the House today. In my judgment, we are doing far more than reauthorizing the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act for 4 years. We are in fact renewing our commitment to fight the scourge and horror of child abuse and neglect—with actions rather than just with words.

Yet, in reality, the conference report to H.R. 1904 goes well beyond addressing the issue of child abuse. It in fact recognizes and responds to one of the most disturbing problems in American society today—the problem of family violence. For the first time, we have directed specific funds for family violence prevention in title III of this bill to assist its victims—who are of all ages.

I was a Member of this body in 1974 when the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act was first enacted. I was a proud original sponsor of the measure. It was considered a landmark law at that time—for it was the first time the Federal Government had responded to this problem. I remember the first bill I authored as a newly elected Member of the House in 1968 was a Child Abuse Prevention Act, and I have worked on the legislation ever since.

Today as we evaluate the effectiveness of the Child Abuse Act over its 10 year history—we can only give it mixed reviews. It has been crippled by a chronic lack of adequate funding to meet the growing challenges associated with child abuse prevention. Yet despite this major shortcoming, progress has been made—we find its programs have developed an important base of supportive prevention and treatment efforts to deal with this problem. We have seen a dramatic increase in the number of cases of child abuse being reported from 10 years ago.

Yet as we complete this reauthorization process, we see that far from abating, the child abuse problem is in fact proliferating in this Nation. In 1982 alone, more than 929,000 were reported nationwide. The challenge was before Congress to beef up the child abuse law and make it work. I believe we have done that and more.

Specifically, this bill provides for increases in funding levels for child abuse programs as follows: a total of $158.1 million through fiscal year 1987 with $33.5 million in fiscal year 1984, $40 million in fiscal year 1985, $41.5 million in fiscal year 1986 and $43.1 million in fiscal year 1987. Not less than $9 million is available per year for State grants and a floor of $11 million is available each year for research, demonstration and information dissemination activities.

One of the more important features of this legislation is in the form of another expansion of the definition of seniors just because they are old. I feel that in many instances, mandatory reporting laws hurt—rather than help—abused elderly family members and serve to merely reinforce the negative age-based sterotypes which continued to charaterize adult protective service programs.

It is our intent that this research will encourage more appropriate models for the prevention and treatment of the elderly. These models should be similar to those used in treating abused spouses: the establishment of support groups, temporary shelter facilities, economic assistance to promote or retain self-sufficiency and programs aimed at developing a more positive self-image.

I pledge my own resources to working with the Department in this area to assure that all family violence program and projects appropriately respond to the needs of the elderly. A recently released report by the Department of Justice's Task Force on Family Violence, as well as an April 1984 report by the Bureau of Justice Statistics, both confirmed the need for greater attention in this area.

I am pleased that the Family Violence Prevention and Service Act embodies the collective concerns of professionals and community service providers around the country. It is the culmination of the efforts of the Education and Labor Committee, as well as the Select Committee on Aging and the Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families. I also wish to note the special contributions of the distinguished former chairman of the Aging Committee, CLAUDE PEPPER, for his active role in bringing the problems associated with elder abuse to public attention.

I also wish to commend our subcommittee chairman, AUSTIN MURPHY, for his dedicated leadership in steering this bill through the legislative process. His concern for abused children and his recognition of the special problems of family violence deserve our praise. The Baby Doe provisions contained in this bill are in place primarily due to the dedicated efforts of our distinguished ranking Republican, JOHN ERLENBORN, who has led the fight to gain recognition for this special population of handicapped children. Upon his retirement at the end of this session, he can look to this legislation knowing that he has made a valuable contribution of preserving the lives of future children born with handicapping conditions.

This bill had been the subject of months of negotiations and the final product deserves bipartisan support. It combines the concerns of many concerned individuals and organziations dedicated to assisting the more vulnerable members of society in times of crisis. It seeks to prevent abuse before it occurs—and educate families, law enforcement personnel, social services providers and communities—in the most effective strategies which can prevent these problems before they occur. I am proud to have been involved in the development of this legislation and urge my colleagues to support this landmark legislative achievement.●

● Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to express my support for the Child Abuse Amendments of 1984. The 1984 amendments reflect an attempt to take a more active role in addressing this horrendous problem.

I believe that all who have participated in the development of the amendments are to be commended for the broad approach of the bill. Title III, which provides for State demonstration projects to prevent family violence, is particularly significant. Abuse of the vulnerable should not be tolerated just because it takes place within the home environment. Even as children should not be abused, they should not be subjected to witnessing the abuse of a parent or grandparent. Our children view us as strong, all-knowing protectors. It has got to be terrifying for a child to see the person that he or she depends upon abused or abusing. A home should be a place of nurturing shelter, not a house of horrors.

I want to also take this opportunity to commend the many care givers who have become sensitized to the problem of abuse. It is encouraging to hear stories about children being asked about how injuries occurred and adults are being offered support when injuries are intentionally inflicted on them. It is my hope that the 1984 amendments will serve to support this growing awareness and concern on the part of health care practitioners, teachers, and social workers who have contact with families.

There are those who say that abuse has always been with us. That is true, and yet, that is no reason to accept the unacceptable. Let us all take this opportunity to commit ourselves to protecting the most vulnerable amongst us.●

● Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, I am extremely pleased to support adoption of the conference report on H.R. 1904, the Child Abuse Amendments of 1984.

This legislation represents a significant commitment by this Congress to the victims of family violence in our Nation—both abused children and abused adults. As we heard over and over again in testimony before the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families, in recent years incidents of child abuse, especially sexual abuse, have increased well over 100 percent. Injuries from abuse are becoming more severe, and involve younger and younger children.

We have also known, for many years, that battered women across our Nation number in the millions. We know that 2,000 to 4,000 are beaten to death each and every year.

In my own district in Louisiana, Crescent House, a shelter for battered women in New Orleans operated by Associated Catholic Charities, served 590 abused women and their children last year. The shelter had to turn away 782 people for lack of space.

This legislation says to the victims of family violence—we hear you and we are prepared to help. I commend my colleagues in the Congress for their careful deliberation and their firm and strong response.●

● Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report to H.R. 1904, the Child Abuse Amendments of 1984.

While all sections of this landmark legislation are equally deserving of the House's support, as ranking minority member of the Select Committee on Aging, I want to call particular attention to title III of the bill. Title III deals with family violence in general and elder abuse in particular.

I brought the Aging Committee to Union, NJ, in April 1980, for a fact-finding hearing on this subject. Testimony of sociologists, aging service providers, and senior citizens themselves all agreed that elder abuse was occurring in far greater instances than previously believed, and that only a concentrated plan of attack that reached the root causes of abuse and involved all levels of government and the private sector promised relief.

In November 1983, the New Jersey Division on Aging and Kean College helped sponsor a conference on elder abuse, and a study released by the New Jersey Divisions on Aging and Youth and Family Services at the conference found that up to 8,000 older persons statewide are victims of some form of elder abuse—financial, psychological, or physical—each year. The study revealed that in New Jersey, the victims tended to be female, over age 75, suffering from poor health, and victimized predominantly by relatives over the age of 40. Other studies conducted nationally and in other States made similar findings, and estimates are that as many as 5 percent of America's elderly are victimized annually.

In February of this year, I joined with several of my colleagues on the Aging Committee, including Chairman ROYBAL, the chairman of the Human Services Subcommittee, Mr. BIAGGI, and our distinguished colleague from Ohio, Ms. OAKAR, in urging support for the Family Violence Protection and Services Act amendment to H.R. 1904, introduced by the gentleman from California, Mr. MILLER. The House adopted the Miller amendment, now title III of the Child Abuse Amendments of 1984.

As agreed to by the conference committee, this legislation provides up to $63 million over the next 3 years for temporary shelters for abused victims—who often have nowhere to go—transportation, temporary food, clothing, medical services and information, and referral to other community services. A National Center on Family Violence within the Department of Health and Human Services would disseminate information and conduct ongoing research into the causes of family violence—including elder abuse—and its prevention and treatment, while the Attorney General is authorized to provide up to $2 million in grants to help train local law enforcement agencies who must respond to incidences of family violence.

I am concerned that the conference report contains no language which would specifically require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to coordinate and consult with both the Administration on Aging and the National Institute on Aging in carrying out the sections of the bill dealing with elder abuse. The Administration on Aging [AOA], as the sole Federal agency charged with coordinating Federal aging policy, is in an ideal position, along with its State and area agencies on aging throughout the country, to act to bring elder abuse resources together in a cohesive, nonduplicative way. Indeed, AOA has already conducted several research and demonstration projects in the area of elder abuse through title IV of the Older Americans Act, and many State and area agencies on aging are actively involved in elder abuse research or various services to victims and potential victims. Moreover, while the National Institute on Aging has no elder abuse activities underway at the present time, elder abuse is within the purview of NIA's Behavior Sciences Research Program. I am hopeful, however, that such coordination and consultation will result as a matter of course, and plan to monitor this matter.

Other actions are necessary. Adequate funding for aging programs which enable the older citizen to get out of the house and interact with others will both lessen the opportunities for elder abuse and increase the likelihood that it will be detected. Likewise, legislation I have introduced to provide an income tax credit to those families who care for an older family member in the home would strenghten the traditional extended family while relieving financial pressures which sometimes lead to abuse.

Efforts to reduce alcohol and drug abuse, violence in the media and pornography will help reduce tensions which may foster domestic violence.

At the same time, the just-concluded year-long study by the Attorney General's Task Force on Family Violence has called for swifter action in arresting and punishing those guilty of abuse. While some may balk at increased intervention by authorities in what the report calls traditional family matters, the report, in calling for a crackdown on all forms of domestic violence, correctly observes that violence is a crime, whether it's committed inside the home or on the street; whether it's committed by a loved one or a stranger. I urge our State and local lawmakers to carefully consider the report's recommendations that individuals charged with violent family crimes be arrested regardless of the victim/alleged attacker relationship, that overnight incarceration of persons arrested for incidences of family violence be allowed in appropriate cases, and that the violation of a protection order issued in a family violence case be considered a criminal offense.

Legislation alone is not enough, of course. Attitudes about the old must change. Programs and activities which bring young and old together—schoolchildren adopting residents of a local nursing home for periodic visits, for example—will help erase myths and promote greater mutual understanding and respect across the generations.

Mr. Speaker, the groundwork for a comprehensive assault on this humiliating crime has been laid. Adoption of the conference report to H.R. 1904 is a major first step forward.

I urge my colleagues to approve this legislation.●

● Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 1904, the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act Amendments of 1984. As the chairman of the Select Committee on Aging I would like to take this opportunity to express my strong support for this most important legislation. Not only does this legislation deal with such difficult issues such as care for severely handicapped infants and adoption, but it also addresses the issue of family violence and elder abuse. It is the latter that I wish to speak about today.

Family violence is a national problem and of epidemic proportions, according to a Department of Justice report released last week. Research on family violence in the 1970's uncovered the existence of elder abuse. Since then various efforts have been undertaken to document and address this problem. The Select Committee on Aging, in 1979, held its first of four congressional hearings on the subject of elder abuse. The committee has attempted to document the incidence of such abuse and estimates that anywhere from 500,000 to 2.5 million elderly persons are abused each year. The reason for such a large discrepancy in numbers is because estimates of abuse are based only on cases reported to social service agencies, and few States have mandatory reporting laws. Also, many physicians and psychotherapists in the private sector seldom report cases of abuse to these agencies. Thus, it appears that these estimates may be but a fraction of the total number of cases.

Included in this legislation are several important and meaningful provisions. Specifically, I would like to highlight those that pertain to the issue of elder abuse. They are as follows:

Title II of the act establishes the Family Violence Prevention Services Act of 1984.

Funding is authorized for this title at $11 million for fiscal year 1985 and $26 million for fiscal years 1986 and 1987.

Funds would be provided to local organizations for the primary purpose of providing temporary shelters to abused victims and dependents. Other types of programs that could be funded include referral and information, transportation, temporary food, clothing, and medical services.

It establishes a national clearinghouse of family violence which is directed to conduct research and disseminate information on the problems associated with abuse of the elderly. The two specific research activities that the Secretary is required to conduct through the center are first, a national incidence study on the number of abused elderly and second, a study to assess the impact of mandatory reporting on the ability to assist and treat victims of elder abuse.

In order to assure that the elderly receive fair and equitable treatment in programs funded by this act, there are added provisions to assure nondiscrimination based on age.

The act defines family violence as including abuse between family members, including the elderly.

As chairman of the Select Committee on Aging, I would like to commend the conferee's on their insight to the needs of the elderly. I would especially like to commend and thank my colleague, MARIO BIAGGI, for his tremendous contribution as a conferee and as a ranking member of the Select Committee on Aging regarding the issue of elder abuse.

I support immediate approval of this conference report and urge my colleagues to join me in doing so.●

● Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference report on the Child Abuse Amendments of 1984, which would extend the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act through fiscal year 1987. This bill has received overwhelming bipartisan support from my colleagues in both the House and the Senate.

Key elements of the bill include assurances that severely handicapped infants receive adequate appropriate medical care, the establishment of a new program to prevent family violence and to shelter family violence victims.

There is a tremendous need to combat this violence. Abuse at home continues to escalate. The single major cause of injury to women is battery. Annually, some 2,000 to 4,000 women are beaten to death. Evidence clearly indicates that family violence is getting worse, women aren't the only victims. Oftentimes children, men and elderly persons are abused.

Across the Nation, efforts are being made to prevent family violence. Many educational programs are being developed by local and State agencies. However, they cannot possibly fill the void that is left by the dramatic reductions in Federal support. To counter these reductions title III of this legislation authorizes $11 million in fiscal year 1985 and $26 million in each fiscal 1986 and 1987 for State demonstration projects designed to assist States in their efforts to prevent family violence and to provide shelter and related assistance, such as, counseling self-help services to abusers, victims, and their dependents. Also, a national clearinghouse on family violence will be established which includes elder abuse and calls for the coordination of elder abuse programs and activities.

This conference agreement also includes a House provision earmarking $2 million in each of the next 3 fiscal years for training programs to enable our law enforcement officials to better handle family violence. It is estimated that law enforcement officials spend one-third of their time responding to domestic violence calls. The FBI has reported that 25 percent of all police officers killed in the line of duty, and 40 percent of those injured, were responding to incidents of family violence.

Over the last few months, we have learned with shocking horror that a few day-care workers are child molesters. Congress has a responsibility to address this heinous problem. This conference report contains provisions which will hold accountable all persons who abuse children. This includes employees of residential facilities and staff persons providing out of home care—such as child day care facilities. The primary focus is to encourage States to establish procedures for investigating and addressing reported cases of child abuse or neglect of children of all ages. As the father of small children, I am personally committed to Congress' continued attention to these concerns.

Mr. Speaker, while I know that this legislation will not completely rid our country of child abuse, it is a step toward that goal. I urge all of my colleagues to support this urgently needed legislation.●

● Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 1904, the Child Abuse Amendments of 1984.

The statistics on child abuse in this country are grim testimony on the need for this legislation. National reports of child neglect and abuse increased by 106 percent between 1976 and 1981, and that's only the tip of the proverbial iceberg. It is estimated that for each reported case of abuse, at least two more are suspected but not reported.

A survey by the National Committee for Prevention of Child Abuse indicates that in recent months, reported incidence of child abuse continued to climb in 45 States, more than 38 States reported noticeable increases in reports of sexual abuse of children, and more than one in four States reported an increase in child-abuse-related deaths in 1982, Yet, due to budget constraints, State and local services are being cut as caseloads grow. Agencies are forced to review cases based on the severity of the report, often ignoring reports of abuse to children over age 12.

In addition to the well-documented tragedy of child abuse, the broader category of family violence is addressed by this legislation. I was proud to be a cosponsor of the original House amendment that extended this legislation to include this growing problem.

It is estimated that our law enforcement officials spend one-third of their time responding to domestic violence calls, and the FBI has reported that 25 percent of all police officers killed in the line of duty, as well as 40 percent of those injured, were responding to incidents of family violence. Reports have revealed that over 6 million wives are abused by their husbands each year, and some 2,000 to 4,000 women are beaten to death annually. With respect to the elderly, the Select Committee on Aging has found that there are approximately 600,000 cases of elder abuse each year.

Private charitable organizations are to be commended for having taken the lead in providing much needed shelter and support services for family violence victims. Like child abuse programs, however, these agencies are simply unable to meet the ever-increasing need for these services. Some reports have indicated that for every person that these organizations help, 10 people must be turned away.

Mr. Speaker, this intolerable situation must be reversed. The conference report we consider today would provide a necessary measure of Federal assistance to help stem the tide of this national tragedy. On behalf of battered women, children, the elderly, and police officers who must respond to these calls, I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this legislation.●

Mr. DINGELL (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendments be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I will not object, I only seek this opportunity to commend the gentleman from Michigan for his leadership in steering this legislation which has been quite controversial through to this point and expected passage. It is a monumental effort on his part and it shows his great leadership and skill that he has as a legislator that we are now at this point in the legislative process and about to adopt very important, significant public health legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will not object, but I take this opportunity to commend the chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] and the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE], and others who worked so tirelessly on this project.

This has been a long 18 months, but I think today that we are passing one of the major consumer reform pieces of legislation of this Congress, and I am proud to be associated with these two gentlemen who have worked so hard on this legislation.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, would my dear friend yield?

Mr. SYNAR. I yield to the chairman.

Mr. DINGELL. I want to thank the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] for his kind comments and also my good friend from Oklahoma [Mr. SYNAR].

It should be observed that many have participated in this undertaking. Certainly the distinguished gentleman from California, the chairman of the subcommittee, has provided the enormously valuable initial leadership, with the committee's distinguished member, the gentleman from Oklahoma, who was continuously interested in working toward a resolution of these problems and the issues associated with this, as was our good friend and colleague from Tennessee [Mr. GORE]. Certainly there is an abundance of credit that can be afforded to all of the members of the committee and the Members of this body and the Members of the other body for the work that they have done, including that of my good friend from Utah [Mr. NIELSON], and the senior minority member, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BROYHILL].

Mr. Speaker, the Comprehensive Smoking Education Act, H.R. 3979, which the House today passed and sent to the President will make a significant contribution to reducing the shocking toll of death and disablement that smoking inflicts upon ill-informed American consumers. It is estimated that smoking makes a major contribution to more than 300,000 unnecessary and painful deaths in this Nation each year. Millions more suffer varying degrees of disability as a result of smoking and millions of pregnancies are complicated by the effects of prenatal smoking.

The health groups, Congressmen WAXMAN, GORE, and SYNAR and Senator WENDELL FORD deserve special gratitude for working out the new agreement that made enactment of this important legislation possible.

An agreement was originally hammered out after more than a year's difficult negotiations between the health groups, Congress, and the tobacco industry, represented by the Tobacco Institute. When the Tobacco Institute was unwilling or unable to carry forward its part of the agreement and win Senate approval of the House-passed bill, the agreement died and it appeared that the legislation had died with it. Senator FORD, the health groups, and the concerned Congressmen, however, were able to fashion a new agreement which resulted in today's important action.

This and future generations of Americans will benefit enormously from the enactment of H.R. 3979.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SYNAR. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. I would like to commend Chairman DINGELL as well as the gentleman from California [Mr.WAXMAN] and the ranking minority member, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BROYHILL] for coming to what I consider a very good solution to the problem.

I was opposed to what I thought was a bit of harassing on the original label warning with the apple with the dagger in it. However, I think what we have now is a very sensible approach which we can do and get the message across that smoking is bad for the health.

I certainly want to thank him and do support the bill fully.

Mr. SYNAR. Before I give back my time, Mr. Speaker, let me just finally say that a lot of times in this body there is a lot of criticism on the activities of the staff. But I want to take this opportunity to thank the staff of the Energy and Commerce Committee, my personal staff, AL GORE's personal staff and the staff in the other body for the excellent job they have done.

This is a great victory not only for consumers today but for the tobacco industry, and I am proud to put my name on it.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, our actions here today end a long and arduous trek through the legislative process. As one who negotiated this bill with my colleague MIKE SYNAR I take great pride in its passage and applaud the many individuals who worked tirelessly to keep this bill alive. The distinguished chairman of the committee, JOHN DINGELL, and the subcommittee chairman, Mr. WAXMAN, must be singled out for their leadership, diligence, and their perseverance.

The amendment to H.R. 3979 adopted earlier today by the Senate is a slight modification that is reasonable and acceptable. The Senate has completed its work swiftly and in good faith and has preserved the critical elements of the bill.

It is a privilege to have played a role in bringing together representatives of the health community and the tobacco industry, to reach this historic compromise. The decision to negotiate was a dangerous but courageous one for both sides. But the result was worth the effort. It marks the beginning of a new era of discussion and cooperation.

This is a clear victory for the public health. H.R. 3979 will give Americans new and accurate information about the health risks of smoking information that will be especially critical to teenagers and pregnant women.

Mr. Speaker, today we send to the President a bill that makes a vital contribution to the public health. I urge him to lend his quick approval.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, every day we are seeing more evidence of the dangers of cigarette smoking.

The Surgeon General's reports, and scientific evidence that is being accumulated almost daily, illustrate the many health problems that are linked to smoking.

I support the compromise reached on H.R. 3979, the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act, because I believe it strikes a sound balance and will provide consumers, in this case smokers, with a strong warning of the dangers they face.

Mr. Speaker, the articles to which I referred are as follows:

THE EFFECTS OF SMOKING ON HEALTH

A World Health Organization (WHO) Expert Committee recently reaffirmed a statement released in 1970 concerning the effects of smoking cigarettes on health. It states that "smoking-related diseases are such important causes of disability and premature death in developed countries that the control of cigarette smoking could do more to improve health and prolong life in these countries than any single action in the whole field of preventive medicine". The specific effects of smoking, as outlined by the WHO Committee are summarized below.

LUNG CANCER

The increase in lung cancer mortality in those countries where cigarette smoking has been widespread continues without interruption. In some countries, such as the United Kingdom and the United States, there is a leveling-off of mortality rates among men under 60 years of age, for whom cigarette consumption reached a plateau 20 years ago. In women, whose cigarette consumption has been rising rapidly in the past 30 years, lung cancer mortality continues to rise at an increasing rate. Mortality rates from lung cancer are 10 times greater in smokers than in persons who have never smoked. Cessation of smoking reduces this differential gradually so that after 10 years the mortality rate for these ex-smokers approaches that for persons who never smoked. This indicates that widespread cessation of smoking would rapidly reduce lung cancer mortality.

In the United States smoking was considered to be responsible for 68,000 of the estimated 84,000 lung cancer deaths in 1976. Lung cancer risks increase directly with the number of cigarettes smoked every day, total lifetime number of cigarettes smoked, and depth of inhalation. Lung cancer is also inversely related to age: the younger one starts smoking, the greater the risk of disease. The use of filter tips and low-tar content cigarettes has been shown to reduce slightly the risk of developing lung cancer; the risk is higher than that in nonsmokers, however.

Smokers with occupational exposures to asbestos and uranium have an increased risk of dying from lung cancer. Asbestos workers who smoke have 90 times the risk of developing lung cancer than nonsmoking, nonexposed persons. The risk of lung cancer among uranium miners who smoke is 4 times greater than for smokers who are not miners. The uranium and asbestos industries have only slightly increased lung cancer rates in nonsmokers.

BRONCHITIS AND EMPHYSEMA

Extensive studies in a number of nations confirm that pulmonary function of cigarette smokers is impaired in every known respect when compared to nonsmokers. The prevalence of cough and expectoration in both men and women is closely related to the number of cigarettes smoked; these symptoms usually abate once a person stops smoking. Recurrent episodes of respiratory infection, associated with this excess secretion of mucus, are more frequent in cigarette smokers than in nonsmokers. Retrospective and prospective studies demonstrate that cigarette smoking is responsible for approximately 70% of chronic bronchitis and emphysema cases. Death rates from respiratory diseases are higher in smokers than in nonsmokers, accounting for about 25,000 deaths each year. When young patients stop smoking, pulmonary function may return to normal. Even in persons with moderately severe obstructive disease, stopping smoking may result in striking improvement in dyspnea and cough, with some improvement in ventilatory function.

CORONARY HEART DISEASE

The most important specific effect that smoking cigarettes has on health is the development of premature coronary heart disease (CHD). Cigarette smokers have a significantly higher risk of CHD morbidity and mortality. Long-term epidemiologic studies of healthy populations confirm that a cigarette smoker is more likely to have a myocardial infarction and to die from CHD than a nonsmoker. Cigarette smoking is one of the major risk factors for CHD and acts in combination with elevated blood pressure, elevated serum cholesterol, and other risk factors.

Heart disease caused 648,540 deaths in the United States in 1975. Cigarette smoking is considered responsible for approximately 25% of these deaths. Stopping smoking and controlling other risk factors can reduce morbidity and mortality of CHD.

OTHER CANCER

In addition to developing lung cancer, cigarette smokers have a significantly higher rate of cancer of the larynx, pharynx, oral cavity, esophagus, pancreas, and urinary bladder. Pipe and cigar smokers have elevated risk of developing cancer of the oral cavity, pharynx, larynx, and esophagus when compared to nonsmokers.

PREGNANCY

Mothers who smoke cigarettes during the second and third trimesters of pregnancy have been found to have babies with a lower average birth weight than babies of nonsmoking mothers. This effect is probably the result of higher levels of carboxyhemoglobin in the fetal circulation. An increase in perinatal mortality has been observed in babies born to smoking mothers, particularly when other factors which affect perinatal mortality exist. Stopping smoking is recommended during pregnancy.

SURGEON GENERAL SAYS SECOND-HAND SMOKE ENDANGERS CHILDREN

(By Cristine Russell)

Surgeon General C. Everett Koop said yesterday that "Cigarette smoking can make a significant, measurable contribution to the level of indoor air pollution" and, citing possible health hazards to children exposed to their parents' smoke, urged parents to quit smoking.

At a news conference about the 17th report by a surgeon general on "The Health Consequences of Smoking," Koop provided the government's strongest statement on the controversial issue of second-hand cigarette smoke and its effect on nonsmokers.

In addition, health officials said the new report is the first to provide a detailed biological explanation of how cigarette smoke may damage lung cells.

Most of the reports the first of which was released 29 years ago, have focused on statistical evidence gathered from comparing death and disease in large populations of smokers with that in nonsmokers.

"It is the first time we've brought forth a mechanism that works," said Dr. Claude Lenfant, director of the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute.

Lenfant said "it opens up new avenues," from early detection to possible therapies to help counter the damage.

Koop emphasized yesterday that scientists can say "with greater certainty than ever that cigarettes are the most important individual health risk in this country, responsible for more premature deaths and disability than any other known agent."

He said that smoking is the "major cause" of disability and death from chronic obstructive lung disease, the focus of this year's 515-page report.

It concludes that smoking causes about 50,000 deaths annually from such lung diseases as chronic bronchitis and emphysema, 130,000 from cancer and 170,000 from heart disease.

In addition, more than 10 million Americans are affected by chronic lung disease, which often causes debilitating shortness of breath and accounts for more than 500,000 hospital admissions annually, Koop said.

"It is responsible for a greater limitation of activity than any other major disease category; 40 percent more persons with emphysema reported limitation of activity than did those with heart disease," he said.

The report describes a "clear, plausible mechanism" of how such lung damage is caused and is based on a "large body of scientific evidence," Koop said.

In brief, the evidence suggests that exposure to cigarette smoke may irritate lung tissue, triggering inflammation and an influx of infection-fighting cells that eventually attack the lungs.

This could occur, the report said, because the cells produce an enzyme called elastase that can degrade lung tissue.

At the same time, the cigarette smoke can inactivate a protein in the lungs that normally blocks the action of elastase.

The simultaneous events mean that the excess elastase slowly can degrade lung tissue and lead to emphysema.

"We hope to lay to rest finally that we don't have real understanding about the mechanism," Koop said, referring to repeated tobacco industry criticism.

Koop also said the number of scientific studies showing that nonsmokers can be affected by cigarette smoke is growing. He said there is "very solid" evidence that children of smokers appear to have "small, but, measurable, differences" in lung function and a greater susceptibility to respiratory problems, including bronchitis and pneumonia, early in life.

"In the best interests of his child," Koop said, "a smoker would stop."

Koop, who earlier this week set a nationwide health goal of a "smokefree society by the year 2000," said that this should be achieved largely by educational efforts in the private sector.

He also said he "supports the rights of nonsmokers to have the privilege of being segregated from smokers."

The Tobacco Institute, a trade group representing manufacturers of cigarettes and other tobacco products, said that Koop's report is based on "a great deal of conjecture."

It said that conclusions about the environmental effects of tobacco smoke on nonsmokers do not match findings at a National Institutes of Health workshop held last year.

That NIH workshop, it said, "concluded that the effects, if any, range from 'negligible to quite small.' "

Koop said that the workshop was based largely on a small number of community studies and that 80 studies cited in his report "would go counter to that."

● Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, some question has been raised as to which Federal agency has the authority to enforce the labeling requirements of sections 4(a), 4(b), and 4(c) of H.R. 3979, the Comprehensive Smoking Prevention Education Act. As one who negotiated this bill with my colleague MIKE SYNAR, I can state with certainty that the report of the Committee on Energy and Commerce (H. Rept. 805) fairly and accurately describes the legislative intent of those who were involved in the drafting and passage of this legislation. It was and is the intent of the House that H.R. 3979 transfers the authority for enforcing all of the labeling provisions of this bill from the Department of Justice to the Federal Trade Commission. This was an issue that received a great deal of discussion among the members of the Energy and Commerce Committee before this bill was adopted. The legislative intent was strong and clear and the report accurately reflects that intent. It also is important to note that the members who were involved in drafting this bill were fully aware that the Department of Justice previously had this authority to enforce the labeling sections of the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act, and that they intended to transfer this authority to the FTC.

Some have argued that the House should had amended sections 9 and 10 of the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act in order to more clearly specify the FTC's authority with regard to its enforcement power. I do not agree and neither do any of the other sponsors of this legislation. Section 4(c) of the act as amended by this bill clearly was intended to transfer the entire enforcement authority over compliance with sections 4(a) and 4(b) in their entirety to the FTC as well as to give the FTC authority to review and approve or disapprove plans to be submitted by the tobacco manufacturers and importers about how they intended to rotate those warnings.●

● Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, some question has been raised by the distinguished Senator from Alabama, Mr. HEFLIN, and the distinguished Senator from South Dakota, Mr. PRESSLER, as to whether the report of the Committee on Energy and Commerce on H.R. 3979, the Comprehensive Smoking Education Act contains technical errors with regard to whether the Federal Trade Commission has the authority to enforce the requirements of section 4 concerning labeling. Unfortunately, these concerns were raised by the distinguished Senators after the Senate debate on this bill had been completed and after the bill had been sent back to this body for reconsideration in light of the Senate amendments. The distinguished Senators were not involved in the drafting of the bill, nor in the debate about the bill, nor were they involved in any of the negotiations which resulted in the ultimate compromise version of the bill adopted by the House and the Senate.

I want the record to be absolutely clear. It was and is the intention of the Energy and Commerce Committee and the full House in voting for H.R. 3979 and in adopting the report of the committee on H.R. 3979 that the complete enforcement power for all of the labeling provisions of the bill and the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act as amended be transferred from the Department of Justice to the Federal Trade Commission. The reference to the FTC in the labeling section, section 4, of the bill was intended to accomplish this purpose and was understood by all involved in the drafting of H.R. 3979 to have accomplished this purpose. Thus, the House report's discussion of the enforcement authority of the Federal Trade Commission is completely and entirely accurate and fairly represents the legislative intent as to the FTC's authority to enforce sections 4 (a), (b) and (c) of this bill. All concerned in the drafting of the bill recognized that section 10 of the FCLAA gave the Department of Justice civil enforcement authority for insuring compliance with the labeling requirement of that act. We concluded it was unnecessary to amend section 10 to provide this authority to the FTC in light of the new language in section 4(c) with regard to the FTC and the FTC's authority over deceptive acts or practices in violation of section 5 of the FTCA. It was and is the intent of the House that any violation of any portion of section 4 of H.R. 3979 will also constitute a violation of section 5 of the FTCA and will be enforceable by the FTC.

I would like to go one step further. As I indicated when the House passed H.R. 3979 and sent it to the Senate for consideration, this bill resulted from an agreement originally hammered out after more than a year's difficult negotiations between the health community, Congress, and the tobacco industry. I was deeply involved in those portions of the negotiations which focused on which Federal agency would have the authority to enforce all of the labeling provisions of the bill. There is absolutely no question about the fact that all of the Members of Congress who were involved in those negotiations and the drafting of the final language which now has been adopted by both the House and Senate intended that the full authority to enforce the labeling sections should reside with the FTC. This intention also was clearly understood by members of the health community and the tobacco industry.

The few modifications to H.R. 3979 which were made by the Senate did not in any way affect or alter our decision to transfer the enforcement authority for the labeling sections of this bill from the Department of Justice to the Federal Trade Commission. In fact, as can be seen from the statements of the chief sponsors of this legislation, the distinguished Senators from Oregon and Utah, Messrs. PACKWOOD and HATCH, the fact that this bill was transferring this enforcement authority from the Department of Justice to the Federal Trade Commission was fully understood and concurred in by the Members of the Senate responsible for H.R. 3979's passage in that body. Thus, there can be no question about the legislative intent of the Congress on this issue.●

● Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to ensure that there is no confusion as to the intent of this body over which Federal agency is to be charged with the authority and responsibility to enforce all aspects of section 4 of H.R. 3979 and the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act, as amended concerning labels on cigarettes and cigarette advertising. Before the enactment of H.R. 3979, the Comprehensive Smoking Education Act, the authority to enforce the labeling provisions of that act fell to the Department of Justice. H.R. 3979 transfers the authority which previously was held by the Department of Justice to the Federal Trade Commission. This transfer of authority is indicated by the references to the Federal Trade Commission in section 4(c) of the act, as amended. In light of this change, those who were involved in drafting H.R. 3979 and working out the final language which has been accepted by both the House and the Senate did not feel it was necessary to amend or otherwise alter sections 9 and 10 of the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act in order to transfer authority for enforcement of the labeling provisions from the Department of Justice to the Federal Trade Commission. The decision not to amend sections 9 and 10 should not be interpreted as a decision by Congress for the Department of Justice to retain its authority. The Report of the Committee on Energy and Commerce accurately reflects the intent of Congress with regard to the FTC's enforcement authority.●

● Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of the 98th Congress I joined with Mr. WAXMAN, Mr. WHITTAKER, and Mr. WYDEN in introducing H.R. 1824, the Comprehensive Smoking Prevention Education Act. It has taken almost 2 years but that legislation, now H.R. 3979, is about to become public law. There is no doubt that the road to enactment has been a perilous one but each time the obstacles and dangers were overcome. Many Members of both parties and in both the House and Senate had an active role to play in this legislation. I am pleased to have done my part.

Because of my strong interest in this legislation I have read the debate in both the House and Senate carefully and am anxious to set the record straight as to how the rotational warning label scheme was to be implemented and enforced. As Senator PACKWOOD, a primary sponsor of the original legislation in the Senate, noted during last week's Senate debate, "It bears emphasis that the history of this legislation makes the House committee report (Rept. No. 98-805) very important in interpreting congressional intent. Chairman DINGELL has advised me that the report was part of the negotiations conducted in his committee. In short, the House Commerce Committee report is the only real legislative history of the legislation before us today."

Senators PRESSLER and HEFLIN submitted statements for the RECORD which make the claim that the legislation gives authority to the Department of Justice for enforcement of the rotational warning scheme rather than the Federal Trade Commission. As a Member of this House who has been intricately involved in this legislation both in the 97th and the 98th Congresses, I wish to state for the RECORD that it was clearly the intent from the very beginning that enforcement of any rotational scheme should rest with the Federal Trade Commission. I think that the House report to H.R. 3979 is without dispute on this enforcement authority.●

● Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, after the Senate had completed its debate on H.R. 3979 and, indeed, after the bill already been returned to the House for reconsideration in light of the Senate amendments, two Members of the Senate who have not been involved in the drafting of either bill or the report on the bill and who have not been involved in any of the extensive negotiations over the contexts of H.R. 3979 submitted comments on the record to the effect that in adopting the report on H.R. 3979, the Energy and Commerce Committee was unaware of the enforcement role of the Department of Justice and mistakenly assumed an enforcement role for the Federal Trade Commission with regard to section 4 of this bill. I want to set the record straight on this matter. Therefore, I insert into the RECORD of this debate excerpts of the section-by-section analysis of the full report from the Committee on Energy and Commerce on H.R. 3979, the Comprehensive Smoking Education Act.

As a sponsor of this legislation I have been intimately involved in the drafting of both the bill and the report and all of the negotiations which led to the ultimate compromise language adopted by this body and the Senate. I also carefully reviewed the House report while it was being prepared. There are no technical errors in this report concerning which agency is to enforce all of the labeling provisions of section 4. It was and is the intention of the authors of this legislation, the Energy and Commerce Committee and all of those who were involved in the negotiations which led to the ultimate statutory language adopted that section 4 should be enforced by the Federal Trade Commission. In reaching this conclusion the members of the House fully recognized that under the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act which the House was amending, enforcement of the old warning provisions was the responsibility of the Department of Justice. H.R. 3979 transfers this enforcement authority to the Federal Trade Commission. In requiring each cigarette manufacturer and importer to submit a plan to the Federal Trade Commission to provide for the implementation of the rotational warning system required by this bill, it was the intent of the House to give the FTC the authority to enforce compliance not only with the rotational aspect of the legislation, but all other aspects of this legislation with regard to the warning statements.

There was no confusion about this issue. It is for this reason that the report of the Committee on Energy and Commerce states clearly and explicitly that the full and complete authority to enforce all of the labeling sections of this bill are to reside with the Federal Trade Commission and not the Department of Justice. As you are all aware, this bill was the result of a compromise between the Members of the House, member of the health community, and members of the tobacco industry. The issue of whether the Federal Trade Commission or the Department of Justice should enforce this legislation was carefully considered. Each of the parties involved in the negotiations was aware of the fact that the Department of Justice previously has enforced the labeling requirements on cigarette packages. It was the conclusion of those who drafted the final compromise that this enforcement authority should be transferred to the FTC and this decision was accepted by all of those involved. It also was agreed by all of those involved that the language of section 4 of H.R. 3979 was sufficient to carry out this purpose and that in light of the FCT's power to enforce sections 4(a), 4(b), and 4(c) of this act as a deceptive act or practice in violation of section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, it was agreed that there was no need to amend sections 9 and 10 of the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act to accomplish the enforcement goal.

The discussion of the FTC's enforcement authority over section 4 of this bill was unaffected by the few amendments made by the Senate. There should be no misunderstanding. It was and is the intent of the House of Representatives that the enforcement authority of all of the requirements of section 4 has been transferred to the Federal Trade Commission by this bill.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

SECTION 1.—SHORT TITLE

Section 1 provides that the short title of the bill is the "Comprehensive Smoking Education Act".

SECTION 2.—FINDING AND PURPOSE

Subsection (a) describes seven findings attributed to the United States Surgeon General regarding the adverse health effects of smoking and the appropriateness of conveying information to the public on the health effects of smoking. The findings reflect conclusions based upon scientific research conducted or reviewed by the U.S. Public Health Service and are consistent with extensive scientific research conducted into the health effects of smoking.

The specific finding are as follows:

1. Cigarette smoking is the largest preventable cause of illness and premature death in the United States and is associated with the unnecessary deaths of over three hundred thousand Americans annually.

2. Cigarette smoking in the United States is a major cause of cancer of the lung, larynx, oral cavity, and esophagus and is a contributory factor in cancer of the urinary bladder, kidney and pancreas.

3. Cigarette smoking is a major cause of chronic bronchitis and emphysema in the United States.

4. Cardiovascular disease accounts for nearly one-half of the deaths in the United States and it is estimated that one-third of the deaths attributed to cardiovascular disease are associated with smoking.

5. Pregnant women who smoke have an elevated risk of miscarriages, stillbirths, and premature births, and giving birth to infants with low birth weight.

6. Quitting or never starting cigarette smoking will reduce an individual's risk of illness or premature death.

7. Federal, State and private initiatives should be encouraged to convey to the American people information on any adverse health effects of smoking.

Subsection (b) provides that the purpose of this Act is to provide a new strategy for making Americans more aware of any adverse health effects of smoking, to assure the timely and widespread dissemination of research findings, and to enable individuals to make informed decisions about smoking.

SECTION 4.—LABELS FOR CIGARETTES AND CIGARETTE ADVERTISING

Subsection (a) amends section 4 of the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act (15 U.S.C. 1333) to provide the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) with jurisdiction over the content and display of cigarette health warnings appearing on cigarette packages and to replace the cigarette health warning required on cigarette packages and advertising with four new warnings. The warning statements will be displayed on the packages and advertising of each cigarette brand in accordance with a system, approved by the FTC, that would require each of the four warning statements to rotate quarterly, in alternating sequence, on the package and advertising of each cigarette brand sold or distributed in the United States. The subsection also provides a series of rotating warning statements for outdoor advertising which are distinct from those required for all other forms of cigarette advertising.

The Federal Trade Commission charged with regulatory responsibility for enforcement of the requirements of Section 4.

A section-by-section analysis of 15 U.S.C. 1333, as amended by subsection 4(a) of the Committee proposal, follows.

Section 4

Subsection (a)(1) makes it unlawful for any person to manufacture, package, or import for sale or distribution within the United States any cigarettes the package of which fails to bear one of the following four labels in accordance with the requirements of this section. The four labels are described below.

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Smoking Causes Lung Cancer, Heart Disease, Emphysema, and May Complicate Pregnancy.

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Quitting Smoking Now Greatly Reduces Serious Risks to Your Health.

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Smoking by Pregnant Women May Result in Fetal Injury, Premature Birth, and Low Birth Weight.

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Cigarette Smoke Contains Carbon Monoxide.

Paragraph (2) of subsection (a) makes it unlawful for any manufacturer or importer of cigarettes to advertise or cause to be advertised (other than through the use of outdoor billboards) within the United States any cigarette unless the advertising bears one of the following labels in accordance with the requirements of the section.

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Smoking Causes Lung Cancer, Heart Disease, Emphysema, and May Complicate Pregnancy.

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Quitting Smoking Now Greatly Reduces Serious Risks to Your Health.

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Smoking By Pregnant Women May Result in Fetal Injury, Premature Birth, and Low Birth Weight.

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Cigarette Smoke Contains Carbon Monoxide.

Paragraph (3) of subsection (a) makes it unlawful for any manufacturer or importer of cigarettes to advertise or cause to be advertised within the United States through the use of outdoor billboards any cigarette unless the advertising bears, in accordance with the requirements of this section, one of the following labels:

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Smoking Causes Lung Cancer, Heart Disease, and Emphysema.

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Quitting Smoking Now Greatly Reduces Serious Health Risks.

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Pregnant Women Who Smoke Risk Fetal Injury and Premature Birth.

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Cigarette Smoke Contains Carbon Monoxide.

Subsection (b)(1) specifies the format requirements pertaining to the display of the required warning statements on cigarette packages. Each label statement will be located in the place label statements were placed on cigarette packages as of the date of the enactment of this subsection. It is the Committee's intent that the warning statements appear on the side panel of cigarette packages as is the current practice. The phrase "SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING" shall appear in capital letters. The size of other letters in the warning shall be the same as the size of all such letters as of the date of enactment. The letters and warning label shall appear in conspicuous and legible type in contrast by typography, layout, or color with all other printed material on the package.

It is the Committee's intent that the Federal Trade Commission be responsible for assuring compliance and enforcement of the requirements of this section. The FTC has responsibility for assuring that the required warning statements are displayed in a conspicuous and legible fashion. It is not intended that FTC jurisdiction be extended to any printed material on the package, including the color and design of the package, beyond assuring that the type used in the warning statement be clear and conspicuous by virtue of being in contrasting color with the background of the statement and otherwise in conformity with the requirements of this paragraph.

Nothing in this paragraph is intended to eliminate the flexibility manufacturers currently have with regard to the layout of the warning on cigarette package to meet the problems posed by different cigarette package shape or sizes.

Paragraph (2) of subsection (b) specifies the format pertaining to the display of the required warning statements on all cigarette advertising except outdoor billboard advertising. The format required under this section shall, with the following exceptions, be the format required by the consent agreements entered into by the FTC and tobacco industry in 1972 and 1981; which in all other respects shall remain in effect. This legislation supplements the 1972 and 1981 consent agreements.

The warning statements appearing on cigarette advertising, other than outdoor billboard advertising, are required to display the phrase "SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING" in capital letters. In addition, the area of the rectangle enclosing the label shall be 50 percent larger in size than that required on the date of enactment with a corresponding increase in the size of the type in the label. The width of the rule forming the border around the label shall be twice that required as on the date of enactment of this subsection. The Committee intends that by requiring an increase in the size of the type which corresponds to the 50 percent increase in the area of the rectangle in which the warning statement appears, that the area occupied by the type also increase by 50 percent.

In addition, the label may be placed at a distance from the outer edge of the advertisement which is one-half the distance permitted on such date. Each label statement shall appear in conspicuous and legible type in contrast by typography, layout or color with all other printed material in the advertisement. The Federal Trade Commission is responsible for compliance and enforcement of this paragraph and should assure that the warning statements appear in conspicuous and legible type.

The Committee recognizes that cigarette manufacturers or importers, may elect to advertise in publications, intended for distribution in the United States, which are not published in English. In such circumstances, and as is currently required, the language of the warning statements should be printed in the predominant language of the publication in which the advertisement appears. For example, if a cigarette ad appears in a publication distributed in the United States and which is printed in Spanish, the language of the warning statement should be printed in Spanish.

Paragraph (3) of subsection (b) specifies that the format and type style of each label statement required by subsection (a)(3) for outdoor billboard advertising shall be that required in outdoor billboard advertising as of the date of enactment of this subsection. In addition, each required label statement shall be printed in capital letters of the height of the tallest letter in a label statement on outdoor advertising of the same dimension on such date of enactment.

Each such label statement shall be enclosed by a black border which is located within the perimeter of the format required in outdoor billboard advertising of the same dimension on such date of enactment and the width of which is twice the width of the vertical element of any letter in the label statement within the border. In all other respects the 1972 and 1981 consent agreements that apply to outdoor advertising shall remain in effect.

Subsection 4(c) specifies the criteria for assuring that each manufacturer or importer of cigarettes will rotate the warning statements in the format required by subsections (a) and (b) every three months and in alternating sequence. The requirement that the warning statements rotate quarterly applies to the packages and advertising of each brand of cigarette, including billboards.

The warning statements will be rotated in accordance with a plan prepared by the manufacturer, importer or by a group of manufacturers. The plan will be reviewed by the Federal Trade Commission and approved by the FTC if found to be in compliance with the Act. It is the responsibility of the FTC to promptly review all plans submitted pursuant to this section to determine whether the plan complies with the requirements of the Act. The FTC shall approve any plan submitted by manufacturers or importers if those plans will reasonably assure that the rotation of the warning statements will occur quarterly in alternating sequence and which reasonably assure that all the labels required by paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) of subsection (a) will be displayed by the manufacturer or importer at the same time. It is the Committee's intent that to the extent commercially feasible and without imposing an undue burden on any manufacturer or importer, all warning statements should be rotated so that the public will see different warnings on the package and advertising of each cigarette brand every three months. The Committee does not intend that the Federal Trade Commission, in approving plans submitted under this authority, require that a manufacturer or importer utilize more than one warning label on any brand during a single three months period.

Nothing in this bill is intended to vest any jurisdiction in the FTC beyond their traditional jurisdiction except as a consequence of their authority to approve and enforce a rotational plan in conformity with the requirements of section 4 of the FCLAA. Enforcement of the plan is intended to assure compliance with sections 4(a), 4(b), and 4(c) of this Act; and violations of the plan and those sections will also constitute a deceptive act or practice in violation of section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

In preparing a rotational system for submission to the FTC for approval, the Committee recognizes that there may be more than one system which would comply with the subsection. Any such system must be necessity take into account practical constraints on the production and distribution of cigarette packages and the dissemination of cigarette advertising.

By way of example, a satisfactory rotational system could be one in which rotation of the warnings on cigarette packages will take place at the time the cigarettes are placed in the package. The Committee does not expect manufacturers to rotate labels on cigarette packages that were correctly labeled in one quarter but which remained in commerce during a subsequent quarter. With respect to advertising in print media such as newspapers, magazines, theater pamphlets, magazine and newspaper inserts, the quarter in which the cover or closing date of the particular publication falls could determine the warning that is required to be displaced. Sidewalk poster and transit placards could provide for rotation according to the actual scheduled appearance date of the advertising.

The Committee recognizes that mail circulars and point of sale advertising present special difficulties for rotation as they are often purchased on a single date but utilized for periods longer than three months. In such cases the Committee believes the warning printed on these items should be the one required for the advertising of the respective brand on the day that the item was ordered.

Outdoor billboards present similar difficulties because the useful life of such advertisements is longer than newspaper or magazine advertising. On occasion some outdoor billboard advertisements may remain in service for more than three months without having a substantial portion of their surface repapered, replaced, or repainted. Therefore, the Committee believes an acceptable rotational system for billboards would be one that provided for quarterly rotation of the health warning statement on a brand's outdoor advertisements at the time the advertisement is placed in service or at the time the advertisement on the billboard is replaced, repapered, or repainted. In such instances, the health warning should be replaced with the warning required for the quarter in which falls the date the billboard advertisement is replaced, repainted, or repapered. If the billboard advertisement is not replaced, repainted or repapered during a given quarter, it is not the intention of the Committee to require replacement of the health warning.

In the case of point of sale advertising, mail circulars and outdoor billboards, the Committee recognizes that in some cases it may not be possible to assure that the warning statements required on these forms of a brand's advertisements will, in every instance, rotate on a quarterly basis. The Committee does not believe such limited anomalies are inconsistent with a satisfactory rotational system.

Subsection 4(b) of the Committee proposal provides that the amendments made by subsection (a) shall take effect twelve months following enactment of this Act. A one-year delay in the effective date of this section is intended to allow cigarette manufacturers and importers adequate time to prepare and receive FTC approval for the rotational plans required by subsection (a). The Committee expects the FTC to allocate sufficient resources to review plans submitted to assure that all rotational systems are reviewed and, if in compliance, approved will in advance of the scheduled effective date. Any changes in any rotational system proposed by a manufacturer or importer which the FTC finds are necessary to bring into compliance with the Act should be made in advance of the scheduled effective date.

SECTION 6.—MISCELLANEOUS AMENDMENTS

Subsection (a) technically revises the first finding of the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act (15 U.S.C. 1331) to reflect the requirement of multiply warning notices on the packages and advertising of cigarettes.

Subsection (b) amends section 3 of the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act (FCLAA) to define the term "Secretary" as used in the Act to mean the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

Subsection (c) amends section 8 of the FCLAA to state that nothing in the Act, other than the requirements of section 4, shall be construed to limit, restrict, expand, or otherwise affect the authority of the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) with respect to unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the advertising of cigarettes.

This subsection requires the FTC to act consistent with the requirements of section 4 of the FCLAA (as amended) concerning the content of the cigarette health warning, its format, size, and location. In all other respects, the FTC retains its traditional authority over deceptive or unfair cigarette advertising. If a cigarette manufacturer or importer violated this act—e.g. for failure to rotate in accordance with an approved plan—the FTC could sue it in Federal court for failure to comply with this act's requirement pursuant to section 13(b) [15 U.S.C. 53(b)] of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Subsection (d) revises section 9 of the FCLAA to make necessary technical amendments.●

CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 2603, OLDER AMERICANS ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1984

Mr. ANDREWS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Senate bill (S. 2603) to extend the authorization of appropriations for, and to revise the Older Americans Act of 1965.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the conference report is considered as having been read.

(For conference report and statement, see Proceedings of the House of September 19, 1984.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ANDREWS] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PETRI] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, today we are considering the conference report on S. 2603, a bill to reauthorize the Older Americans Act of 1965 for 3 additional years. I am proud of our efforts. This legislation has received broad, bipartisan support from both sides of the aisle—here in the House and also in the Senate. My colleague, Congressman TOM PETRI, the ranking Republican on the Human Resources Subcommittee, has joined me as an original cosponsor, along with Congressman MARIO BIAGGI, Congressman PAT WILLIAMS, Congressman BALTASAR CORRADA, and Congresswoman OLYMPIA SNOWE. I would, of course, be remiss if I did not remember the hard work put into this legislation by our later chairman, Carl Perkins of Kentucky. This legislation was special to him. As an original cosponsor, his influence and concern was expressed throughout this bill as it was in much of our human service legislation. I believe he would be proud of our efforts as well. In remembering the contribution of our past chairman, allow me to also pay special thanks to the current Chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, Congressman AUGUSTUS HAWKINS of California, for providing his leadership and guidance during the House-Senate conference.

In bringing up the conference report on S. 2603, what we are considering is the reauthorization of what I believe to be one of the most effective pieces of legislation Congress has developed. In addition to providing a full range of services and programs to meet the needs of older people in their own communities, this act supports community service employment opportunities at minimum wage for unemployed low-income individuals.

The House-Senate compromise does not seek substantial changes in the basic framework of this legislation and the programs for which it provides. Some administrative fine-tuning—changes that we hope will result in some improvements in program management—are proposed.

Let me summarize briefly the terms of the conference agreement:

The conferees agreed on a 3-year authorization period at levels approximately midway between the higher House figures and the lower Senate figures. These amounts are sufficient to assure the Congress and older Americans that the programs of the Older Americans Act can be maintained at at least their current service levels.

Additionally, the conferee's agreement:

Clarifies the direct reporting relationship between the Commissioner on Aging and the Secretary of Health and Human Services;

Makes a number of administrative changes with regard to the issuance of regulations, the treatment of funds for grants and contracts, and the commingling of funds.

Provides new emphasis on assistance for Alzheimer's disease victims and their families, on the identification and prevention of elder abuse, and on assistance for meeting the needs of minority elderly;

Increases flexibility for States to transfer funds between categorical meal programs and supportive services programs; and

Makes various administrative changes in both the title III and title V programs to assure that Federal funds are used efficiently and effectively at the State and local level in providing services.

Finally, the conferees agreed to a new title VII to develop health education and training programs for older Americans. I am particularly pleased with this accomplishment.

It is our hope, in adopting this new title, that a very modest investment will provide a very substantial step forward toward reducing the cost of medical care in this country while at the same time improving the health and quality of life for our older citizens. This could also help to halt, or at least slow, the seemingly ever-escalating cost of Federal assistance for medical care.

The new title VII will, in large measure, use existing resources—the network of 3,300 senior centers as classrooms, the 9 million or so older individuals now using those centers as a student body, and the faculties and graduate students in schools of health-related disciplines as teachers. Title VII simply provides the focus for these existing resources to be combined. It is our intention that this program lead to the development of uniform and standardized health and nutrition education programs for older Americans throughout the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I believe we have a good bill here. I have spoken throughout this discussion about my own pride in this bill, as well as that of the committee's. It is, I believe, moreover a bill of which we can all be proud—the Congress and the American people. I am pleased to recommend it for our support.

Mr. Speaker, I will yield to others as I go along, but at this point I yield such time as he may consume to my friend, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE].

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from North Carolina for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to express strong support for this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I compliment my friend and colleague on his able leadership and management of this bill. It is greatly needed. Tennesseeans are strongly in support of this legislation. I am strongly in support of it.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to pass it unanimously.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, as the ranking Republican House member of the conference committee charged with resolving the differences between H.R. 4785 and S. 2603, I am pleased to bring our conference report before the House. This legislation reauthorizes the popular Older American's Act for 3 additional years. With the current law due to expire next week, it is certainly time that the House consider this legislation. At the outset, I wish to thank the new chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee, Mr. HAWKINS, for his efforts to expedite consideration of this conference report and, of course, the Human Resources Subcommittee chairman, Mr. ANDREWS, for his cooperation throughout the past months. I also wish to note that the chairman and ranking minority members of the Senate Subcommittee on Aging showed the House conferees every courtesy, as well as a deep commitment to helping senior citizens. I trust that the full House will be as pleased with the conference report as I am.

The traditional programs funded by the Older American's Act are well known to you, and are retained by this legislation. The reauthorization process found both Houses of Congress standing four-square behind all three major Older Americans Act programs—senior centers, nutrition projects, and community service jobs for needy elderly individuals. Let me assure all my colleagues that those programs are continued and enhanced by this legislation. In this and other respects, the conference report retains the key features of the House bill, while adding some good ideas from the Senate. Let me focus here on the most significant new features contained in the conference draft.

First, responsibility for overseeing the Older American's Act is retained within the current Administration on Aging. The House legislation had created a new Office on Aging, but concern about added administrative costs encouraged conferees to retain the current structure. Nevertheless, our report underscores the need for a direct line of communication from the Commissioner on Aging to the Secretary of HHS.

The House initiative for health and nutrition education is retained in the final draft. Mr. ANDREWS deserves credit for this new program, but I am pleased to note that, by my amendment, the education will include information on the elderly's legal rights to live and to receive medical treatment. All Americans should be assured of their inalienable rights and innate worth as human beings, especially the elderly who all too often feel unwanted or unneeded. It is a measure of America's greatness that our society treasures our most vulnerable members, rather than casting them aside.

The conference report further focuses Federal programs on training, research, and services for treating Alzheimer's disease, even beyond what was provided for in the House bill. This amendment seeks to realize the new-found potential for combating this dread disease.

The Senate bill contained a series of housekeeping changes, not contained in our bill, designed to adjust administration of the act. Several of these were adopted by the conference, including greater authority for the States to transfer funds between certain Older American's Act programs, a percentage approach to State administrative funding, and a cap on title V administrative expenses. I, for one, plan to closely monitor the effect of these changes over the next 3 years to make sure they enhance senior services.

The Senate bill also contained amendments to the Age Discrimination in Employment Act. Regardless of the individual merits of the age discrimination amendments, it is unfortunate that they were included in this unrelated legislation and could not receive a hearing by the appropriate House subcommittee.

Finally, as is common with conference committees, the two Houses have split the difference on the level of funds authorized for most programs under the act.

I urge all of my colleagues to accept our Older American's Act conference report at this time so that the new legislation can be in place when the current authorization expires next week. The programs in this bill serve to maintain the independence and dignity of senior citizens through nutrition programs, senior centers, and community service jobs. Authorization for these programs will end on Sunday unless this bill passes. The elderly are a national treasure. They contributed so much to our society when they were younger. This act assists them to continue making a meaningful contribution. I urge my colleagues to vote yes for this bill—yes for these programs—yes for America's senior citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ANDREWS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference report on S. 2603, the Older Americans Act Amendments of 1984. This important act authorizes the principal programs for providing services to older Americans for fiscal year 1985 through 1987.

Since the Older Americans Act became law in 1965, the Nation has made tremendous progress toward understanding and solving many of the problems which may beset our older citizens. Although older persons may receive services under other Federal programs, this act has become the centerpiece for the organization and delivery of services to this important citizen group. This act has developed from a program of small grants in 1966 to one which now supports 662 area agencies on aging along with 57 State agencies on aging. It is anticipated that this year 213 million meals will be supported through title III of this act both in congregate settings and in the homes of the elderly. It is important to remember that a study of nutrition programs shows that these meals are going to those who need them most. Even with these impressive numbers, we are still not serving all who are in need. Almost 4 million elderly Americans live in poverty; a shocking and appalling number for a nation as rich and affluent as America. Title V of the act provides 62,080 jobs for older persons to maintain their self-worth by providing much needed and valuable services to their local communities through community service employment. It is important to remember—and we know this from the testimony received from participants in the programs; local, State, and Federal administrators; representatives of national organizations and other professionals in the field of aging—that the Older Americans Act is working and working well to serve the elderly of this Nation. I am pleased to offer and support this strengthened conference report which will authorize services for older Americans for 3 additional years.

I would like to take this opportunity to commend my colleagues on the Committee on Education and Labor, especially Mr. ANDREWS, chairman of the Subcommittee on Human Resources, Mr. PETRI, the ranking minority member on Human Resources, and the other members of the committee who spent many hours in hearings, analyzing studies and data, and working with members of the aging community to develop this bill which strengthens and extends these important services to the elderly.

I know that several of our colleagues expressed concerns about some of the provisions of the original bill when it was on the floor in early August, and I would like to take this opportunity to point out that questions of funding level, maintenance of flexibility, and several other concerns, have been addressed.

Mr. Speaker, this conference report is an example of the continuing commitment by the Federal Government to improve and continue these valuable and needed programs for the well-being of the elderly of this country. These programs are part of our investment in America. A society that promotes the elimination of inequality, also promotes a society of economic vitality. We must continue to develop effective programs and services for the fastest growing age group in the country, and I think this reauthorization of the Older Americans Act is a step in that direction. I would like to remind you that when this bill was before you in August, it passed by a vote of 406 to 12. I think we have improved the bill in conference by addressing the major concerns which were expressed by Members at that time. I hope we can pass this conference report unanimously, and I urge my colleagues to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the distinguished chairman of the Human Resources Subcommittee for his work on the 1984 Older Americans Act Amendments, and also, Mr. PETRI, the ranking minority member. I believe that this measure is a good bill which all of us can support enthusiastically.

However, I am concerned about one feature in the Senate-passed bill which was incorporated in modified form in the conference agreement. This, of course, relates to the reduction in the administrative cap for the title V Senior Community Service Employment Program from 15 to 13.5 percent in July 1986 and then to 12 percent in July 1987. The conference agreement does give the Department of Labor waiver authority to allow higher administrative costs. However, I am concerned that this provision may operate unfairly and work a hardship for smaller contractors, particularly minority contractors, who have administered title V projects for a relatively short period of time. The smaller contractors do not have the economies of scale that the larger sponsors have.

Additionally, I am concerned that the new administrative ceiling will force title V sponsors to consolidate projects, which in turn will cause some present enrollees to lose their jobs. Could the distinguished chairman of the Human Resources Subcommittee provide any further information about this amendment?

Mr. ANDREWS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWKINS. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. ANDREWS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I want to stress that this measure is not intended to work a hardship for any title V sponsor. This program has operated effectively and efficiently. I personally think that it's one of the best ever enacted for older Americans. The Senate wanted to reduce administrative costs because title V is operating at 11 percent on the average, primarily because the two largest sponsors have exceptionally low administrative costs.

The waiver was inserted to give the Department of Labor the necessary authority to assure that this provision does not operate inequitably for any sponsor nor create any unforeseen problems.

It will also enable the Department of Labor to handle exceptional circumstances, such as sharp increases in operating costs for the sponsors, including rents, telephone, and other expenses. Moreover, the waiver authority can assure that the lower administrative cap will not damage the program in terms of other goals, such as equitable distribution of enrollees.

Mr. HAWKINS. I thank the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN].

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference committee report on S. 2603, the Older Americans Act Amendments of 1984.

In my 6 years as a member of the Subcommittee on Human Resources, I have learned firsthand of the tremendous importance of the Older Americans Act to senior citizens in the State of Missouri. In the current fiscal year, over $22.8 million has been made available under the act for social services, community service employment programs, and nutrition programs. Because of the act, over 3.8 million congregate and 1.7 million home-delivered meals were served to elderly Missourians.

The conference agreement before us continues these valuable programs with minor change. First, the bill clarifies the relationship between the Commissioner on Aging and the Secretary of Health and Human Resources. This change is designed to assure Federal policy with regard to Older Americans Act programs is made by the Commissioner and no other subordinate official within the Department. Through this change, we are signaling to the elderly that our aging programs will remain a high priority within the Department.

The agreement also amends provisions in the act relating to area plans on aging. An increased emphasis is placed on supportive services for families of elderly victims of Alzheimer's disease, on community-based, long-term care services designed to help elderly persons remain in their homes and in identifying public and private nonprofit entities involved in the prevention, identification, and treatment of the abuse, neglect, and exploitation of older individuals. These three areas were identified by witnesses repeatedly during hearings on S. 2603 and its House equivalent as the areas where area agencies on aging should place additional program focus.

Finally, the conference agreement amends the administrative support structure for State agencies on aging to provide for a simpler funding mechanism for State offices and more flexibility to the States in meeting the needs of the elderly. Under the agreement, the existing authority to transfer funds for the allocation for supportive services to nutrition programs is increased to 27 percent in fiscal year 1985, to 29 percent in fiscal year 1986, and 30 percent in fiscal year 1987. This additional flexibility will encourage increased efforts on the part of the States to meet the particular needs of the elderly within the borders.

I believe that S. 2603 is a strong reauthorization bill which will enjoy the support of the President. I urge an "aye" vote on the agreement.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. NIELSON].

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I am one of the 30 or so Members who voted against this bill when it first came to the floor.

I am in favor of the Older Americans Act and in favor of help for the senior citizen centers. But the reason I voted against this, and I want to mention what the reasons were. First of all, the bill as we passed it in the House called for a 50-percent increase in the authorization level over the present appropriations. I felt that a 50-percent increase was very high. It was not necessary in view of the fact there was already quite a bit of room between the appropriation level existing and the actual appropriations.

I am afraid the Education and Labor Committee in the past has made authorization levels so high as to become almost meaningless and only a small proportion of those is actually funded by the Appropriations Committee. So I think they tend to scale them down automatically.

The Senate in its wisdom asked for a 10-percent increase in the authorization level over the present appropriations.

I would tend to oppose this 30 percent as being excessive if it were not for the fact that is below the recent authorization levels, although I say they are probably meaningless anyway.

This bill, S. 2603, if passed, will assure continuation of help to the senior citizen centers.

I would like, however, to see a little more coordination between the Education and Labor Committee and Appropriations Committee so that we can come in with realistic authorizations and then the Appropriations Committee can act accordingly, rather than having the disparity we seem to have.

I have some reservations about title 7. I feel that this is a new program and maybe the compromise is all right because it takes the Senate approach, which goes slowly in this area. I am going to reserve judgment on that particular program.

I do approve of the change in administration to assure that you have the attention of the administration for senior citizen programs, and I approve that portion of the House program.

I am going to support this bill and urge my colleagues to do the same. But I did want to point out this is a much improved bill over the one we passed, even though we passed it 10 to 1, but this is a much improved bill. It is more realistic and it is one I can support. I urge my colleagues to do likewise.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ANDREWS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SEIBERLING].

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference agreement on S. 2603, the Older Americans Act Amendments of 1984. I commend Chairman HAWKINS and Chairman ANDREWS and all who worked so hard to produce this legislation.

I can testify personally to the importance of these programs to hundreds of the elderly residents of my congressional district. In many cases, the assistance they receive makes a crucial difference in their lives. Surely we can do no less for those whose lives have been lived for us and who helped make the America we know and love.

Mr. ANDREWS of North Carolina. I thank the gentleman for his remarks.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to my friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BIAGGI].

Mr. BIAGGI. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I would like to take this opportunity to commend him for his leadership, as well as the chairman of the full committee and the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PETRI].

As a member of the conference committee, I am proud to rise in support of this conference report, which reauthorizes certainly one of the finest of all Federal programs, the Older Americans Act. With our passage of this conference report today, we reaffirm that the Older Americans Act is the cornerstone of an enlightened Federal policy of providing services to seniors, aimed at promoting independence and dignity.

We have before us not a radical reauthorization proposal but rather a carefully crafted fine tuning of the programs and services under the act. This was done as a reflection of the fact that the act is working and working well across the Nation.

The changes that we have made will provide a blueprint for the continuous successful operation of the program. These changes include a recognition that programs and services under title III(B) of the act are most in need of increased funding. The authorization levels agreed to in this bill for title III bear the largest increases of any other program in the act. Title III(B) provides such key services as transportation, legal services, and senior center services. It received its first increase in appropriations just 2 months ago under an amendment I offered to the second supplemental appropriations bill.

In addition to the pressures brought to bear in title III(B) in terms of the services it now provides, new pressures have been registered because of increased number of elderly being referred to area agencies on aging because of the DIG system in hospitals. This problem was effectively brought to our attention by my colleague from Maine, OLYMPIA SNOWE. Together we developed legislation to increase funding for title III(B). While the amounts in this conference report are less than the original proposal, they do reflect the intent of the Congress that we must provide additional funds for this section of the act.

Mr. ANDREWS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 648, CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS, 1985

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that if and when the Clerk receives a message from the Senate indicating that that body has passed the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 648) with amendments, insisted upon its amendments and requested a conference with the House, that the House be deemed to have disagreed to the amendments of the Senate and agreed to the conference asked by the Senate, and that the Speaker be deemed to have appointed conferees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi? The Chair hears none and, without objection in this instance, the Chair appoints the following conferees: Messrs. WHITTEN, BOLAND, NATCHER, SMITH of Iowa, ADDABBO, LONG of Maryland, YATES, ROYBAL, BEVILL, LEHMAN of Florida, DIXON, FAZIO, HEFNER, CONTE, MCDADE, EDWARDS of Alabama, MYERS, ROBINSON, COUGHLIN, and KEMP.

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to our colleague, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RATCHFORD], the former Commissioner on Aging.

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the conference report on the Older Americans Act Amendments of 1984. While the compromise reached with the Senate is not perfect, it has a number of strong points and deserves support.

As my colleagues know, the Older Americans Act is the cornerstone of Federal efforts to provide assistance to older Americans in the areas of nutrition, transportation, health and social services generally. It complements the Social Security and Medicare Programs which are designed to provide income and medical security to our Nation's senior citizens. Created in 1965, the Older Americans Act programs were a sign of the increasing national commitment to assuring that the legitimate needs of the elderly are met.

The funds under the act go to support many specific projects. Among the more well known is Meals-on-Wheels, a nutrition project that is of enormous benefit to those who find it difficult to prepare their own meals. Also supported are the Federal Council on Aging, Senior Centers and the Community Service Employment Program, one of the most effective and efficient of all Federal programs. Grants are made under the act to hundreds of State and local agencies. These agencies in turn delivered services to over 9 million Americans in 1983. Their work included financing some 203 million meals and providing 62,500 jobs such as conservation workers and day care aid.

This legislation would reauthorize the Older Americans Act for 3 years and make some worthwhile and important changes in the programs. Under the conference agreement, the authorized funding will be $1.26 billion in fiscal 1985, $1.3 billion in fiscal 1986 and $1.37 billion in fiscal 1987. While these figures are reasonable, they are not as high as those in the original House bill and, frankly, not as high as I believe they ought to be in light of the contributions older Americans have made to this country.

The conference agreement also clarifies the reporting responsibilities of the Commissioner of the Administration on Aging to assure direct reporting to the Secretary of Health and Human Services. This action will help to ensure a higher visibility and role for the administration inside the Department of Health and Human Services. New emphasis is also placed by this measure on Alzheimer's disease by identifying it and other neurological disorders as critical areas for research and education. Assistance will also be provided under the legislation to victims of the disease and their families.

The conference report will also ensure that the administration gives new attention to the needs and concerns of older Americans who are members of minorities. In another area, the report's provisions permit the agencies to operate, under the act, programs to assist the victims of elder abuse and their families. Elder abuse is a significant problem in this country and one that deserves the additional attention it will receive as the result of this measure.

Finally, the conference report makes provision for the creation of new title VII to develop education and training programs for older Americans and authorizes $8.6 million for it in fiscal 1985. Under the title, a grant program will be established to provide funds to educational institutions with graduate programs in health and social disciplines to develop programs for older Americans.

Mr. Speaker, the Older Americans Act is of critical importance to the Nation's seniors. They both deserve and need the social programs which are provided under it. These amendments, in addition to reauthorizing the act, make a number of significant adjustments to the act's programs which will benefit older Americans. I strongly urge my colleagues to join me in voting for this conference report.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I strongly favor this conference report as I favored the legislation when it came through the House. It is my privilege and honor to work with the great Congressman from Kentucky, BILL NATCHER, on the appropriations for older Americans. We have always considered these programs very carefully and have always done our best in trying to get the top dollar for them. I want to commend the authorizing committee. It is a pleasure to work with that committee, and particularly my good friend on the minority side, the gentleman from Wisconsin, who has done such a good job here.

When compared with the overall set of Federal programs that benefit older Americans, such as Social Security and Medicare, the programs authorized by the Older Americans Act are a small part. But they are a very important part.

When I go home and visit my area agencies on aging, senior centers, hot meal sites, and home care agencies, it is clear that the programs authorized under this Older Americans Act form an infrastructure of health and social services of great assistance to older Americans.

I am pleased that this core of services is reauthorized and extended in this conference report. The authorization figures approved herein will provide the Appropriations Committee the room we need to continue to assure adequate funding for these programs.

In addition, I am pleased to see the emphasis placed in the conference report on activities that respond to some of the most pressing needs of the elderly—health and nutrition information, services to Alzheimer's disease victims, elder abuse, and the provision of a continuum of health care in the community to assist older people live independently as long as they can.

I would, of course, not pass up this opportunity to say how pleased I am at the continuation of the title V Senior Community Services Employment Program, one of my favorite Federal programs, that provides part-time work to needy people over the age of 55, in community service projects, that seeks to assure that these jobs become converted into unsubsidized jobs, and that provides needed supplemental incomes to people who are ready, willing, and able to work if given the chance. I think the national sponsors and the States do an excellent job of administering this program.

Finally, I would just like to mention one small provision that I was pleased to see adopted in conference allowing the provision of social services to include services designed to address the mental health needs of the elderly.

I again would like to compliment the members of the authorizing committee, the Education and Labor Committee on a job well done.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. COURTER].

Mr. COURTER. It is so good to see the gentleman from California as Speaker pro tempore. It does my heart a great deal of good.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. DELLUMS]. I thank my colleague.

Mr. COURTER. We have worked very closely on many matters, and I look forward to working next year on many matters with the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. I hope so, and I thank the gentleman.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, the American population is growing older, and this will continue to increase pressure on all levels of government, and the private sector, to provide more services for a mature society.

This demographic change is particularly evident in the State of New Jersey, which has the second highest medium age of any State in the Nation, and where people aged 65 and older make up 11.7 percent of the population.

We must meet the challenges of this graying society by providing adequate assistance to needy seniors and by providing opportunities for all older Americans to remain active participants in their communities.

I commend those who have contributed to the reauthorization of the Older Americans Act in its final form. In particular, I applaud my colleagues on the House Aging Committee for carrying out a series of hearings to determine what needs and priorities should be included in the reauthorization.

The amendments before us give special attention to problems, such as elder abuse, which many people didn't know existed until quite recently. The measure also gives priority to the needs of minorities and assistance to victims of Alzheimer's disease. Existing health, nutrition, education, and training programs are maintained or expanded.

It has long been recognized that a society is judged by the way it treats its older citizens. With a rapidly expanding elderly population in need of greater security, we must now have a national commitment to provide appropriate services for senior citizens in the best possible settings. I believe the Older Americans Act Amendments demonstrate our commitment, and I urge my colleagues to agree to the conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I think this act and the passage of this act goes some distance in showing that Americans are indeed compassionate, they are concerned about our senior population. We want to make sure that our senior citizens have many years of comfortable and productive lives.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN].

Mr. MCCAIN. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the reauthorization of the Older Americans Act. This landmark piece of legislation authorizes activities to improve the quality of life to persons age 60 and older.

Since 1965, the act has provided a tremendous array of community-based services to the low-income elderly. The recognition of the specific needs of the elderly has enabled millions of senior citizens to receive basic nutrition and social services. This sytstem has allowed many to remain at home in a comfortable environment and supports the strategy of deinstitutionalization.

Federal, State, and local efforts are joined together in a commitment to provide services to millions of older persons through an aging network, established by the Older Americans Act. Today, there are 57 State units on aging and 600 area agencies on aging. State units have consistently used funds provided under title III to attract other local resources for developing a wide range of services to meet the needs of older persons. Examples of these are: information and referral, outreach, transportation, legal, employment, escort, counseling, adult day care, education, homemakers, nutrition, home repair, and home health care services.

This legislation is designed to develop comprehensive and coordinated community-based social services for older Americans in order to foster independent living. It is my hope that efforts will continue to work toward this goal in light of our expanding elderly population. I believe this direction was clearly maintained when the Older Americans Act was amended to focus on community based long-term care.

In my home State of Arizona, the number of older Americans has increased 215 percent between 1960 and 1980. It is rapidly becoming the No. 1 choice of residence for the elderly. Without the services provided under the Older Americans Act, we would not have adequate State resources to provide for this tremendous growth. I would like to especially thank Connie Baldwin, executive director of the area agency on aging, for the services the agency provides under the Older Americans Act in Maricopa County.

Additionally, language was added which focuses attention on service delivery rendered to those with the greatest economic or social needs, including minority individuals. A unique set of barriers has served to limit aged minority persons from utilization of and access to social and human services. The legislation now requires the administration on aging to consult with national minority organizations in conducting and evaluating training and technical assistance activities.

With the clarification of the goals outlined in the Older Americans Act, a comprehensive delivery system can be established. One which will reach and improve the lives of all our Nation's elderly and allow them to maintain their independence and dignity.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I have no additional requests for time, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ANDREWS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to my very dear friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE].

Mr. PICKLE. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation and commend the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ANDREWS] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PETRI] for their leadership in this vitally important program.

I also take this time to make comment on a subject which affects our elderly citizens, namely, the Social Security Program, and a group which, in my opinion, is trying to take advantage of that program. The latest fundraising solicitation put out by the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare is factually incorrect and misleading.

This solicitation attempts to deceive America's elderly by implying that Congress has denied them promised benefits, by enacting a 3-percent trigger level on the Social Security cost-of-living adjustment. This is not true, this provision has been part of the law since 1972 when the COLA law was first enacted.

This solicitation further attempts to deceive the public by implying that legislation waiving this trigger faces great resistance in the Congress. We all know that nothing could be further from the truth. We, in the House, have moved with all deliberate speed to make sure that any legislation which we enact is technically accurate, administratively feasible, and responsive to the needs of all Social Security beneficiaries. This will be done before this Congress adjourns.

To frighten the public in this manner is shameful. It is just this sort of rhetoric which makes enactment of good legislation so difficult.

This nonsense by the national committee should be stopped immediately, and should be investigated. The public should not be alarmed needlessly. Unfortunately, too many people have already been scared, and all for no reason, since according to the administration's estimates, there will be a Social Security COLA this year even without new legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I am also glad to know that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CONABLE] in a CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 24, put into the RECORD commentary along the same line, about the inaccuracy and the distortion that this mailing has implied. I commend that article to the Member's attention in the hope that we might look into this matter immediately.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKLE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BOEHLERT. The gentleman knows full well and I want our colleagues in the House to know that over 10 million Americans, elderly Americans, have received this scare letter from the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare, a noble-sounding name. It sounds wonderful, and we all support that objective to preserve Social Security and Medicare.

The problem is the National Committee is nothing more than an effective means for scaring elderly and soliciting funds from them. Already over 1 million elderly Americans have sent their hard-earned $10 check to this organization.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE] has expired.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I yield an additional 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKLE. I continue to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BOEHLERT. I thank the gentleman for yielding further.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is absolutely essential that all of us in this Chamber on both sides of the aisle that have been working so hard to preserve Social Security and Medicare benefits for the Nation realize exactly what is happening in this country.

Petitions are going to the Nation's elderly with our names on the petition, leading the elderly to believe that we are sanctioning this fund-raising effort which I say has already, already raised probably $10 million, ostensibly for the purpose of lobbying. Yet, in checking with our distinguished colleagues on the Ways and Means Committee, I find that occasionally they receive a curt memo suggesting what all of us want: That Social Security and Medicare should be preserved and protected.

Mr. CONABLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKLE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CONABLE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, there also is in the most recent notice that has been sent out a box to check if they would wish to have 5 percent of the allegedly threatened COLA paid to the same committee.

In other words, the theory is they need money. They have already taken at least $10 from each of these elderly people in order to represent them. For instance, at a hearing at which the head of the committee did not show up, allegedly now they say they need additonal money to fight to preserve the 1985 COLA, and they would like people to contribute 5 percent of the supposedly endangered COLA for that purpose.

Now, the gentleman and I both know the COLA is very likely to be paid regardless of legislation this year because last month's increase in the cost-of-living probably assured the triggering at the 3-percent level or above regardless of legislation.

So, there is no battle and they are trying to create a strawman here they can knock down for the purposes of working our senior citizens for more money to support their fear campaign among the elderly.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, I agree this practice ought to be stopped, and I think the matter should be referred to our investigative committee on Ways and Means and any other appropriate committee.

● Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on the Older Americans Act Amendments of 1984. I believe that there are two significant points that should be mentioned.

The amendments reassert the existing provision in law which would require that that there be a direct reporting relationship between the head of the Administration on Aging and the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services. The rationale for this provision remains the same—the Secretary should be kept directly in touch with the concerns of older Americans. The current practice of filtering information through the Office of Human Development Services is not appropriate and must not continue. The Secretary must be able to get information directly.

The second significant feature is the now clearly stated requirement that minority people be served by the act. The economically and socially disadvantaged have previously been identified as having special needs that must be addressed in State plans. However, the 1982 report by the Civil Rights Commission pointed out that minority communities were not being served due to a failure of outreach and a failure to specifically serve these communities. State plans will now be required to address these issues and to provide ways to make it possible for all older Americans to participate in the programs under the act. This is a step forward which is to be applauded.

The 1984 amendments to the Older Americans Act deserve the support of all of my colleagues.●

● Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference report to S. 2603, the Older Americans Act Amendments of 1984. As ranking minority member of the Select Committee on Aging, I have devoted considerable attention to the Older Americans Act. In my view, this legislation is perhaps the single most successful law on the books for the elderly today.

Since its inception in 1965, the act has grown from a $6.5 million demonstration project to a $1 billion-a-year network of essential social services.

In my own State of New Jersey, the State division on aging and the 21 county offices on aging received over $31 million in fiscal year 1984; 224 nutrition sites in every corner of the State served over 3.6 million meals last year, and 1.5 million meals were delivered to the homebound through the title III(C) nutrition program. Nearly 300,000 older New Jerseyans received transportation, legal services, home care and other supportive services funded under title III(B) of the act. Through title IV, aging service providers are better trained than ever before. Nearly 1,900 older New Jerseyans have part-time jobs through the title V Senior Community Service Employment Program.

This act is a success because of the dedication of individuals—many of them senior citizens themselves—who have combined forces in a Federal, State, and local partnership, both public and private, to work together for older Americans. Dr. Lennie-Marie Tolliver, Ph.D., the Commissioner of the Administration on Aging since 1981, deserves special praise for her innovative leadership with the Older Americans Act at a time when Federal funding has remained static. Former New Jersey State Aging Director Jacques O. Lebel and his successor, Ann Zahora, have joined with the aging directors in New Jersey's 21 counties to give that State a host of aging services of which I and our State's 1.3 million individuals over age 60 are proud.

The Older Americans Act's vision of an intergovernmental partnership with the private sector to assist the elderly in maintaining secure, independent, healthy and productive lives is being realized through a number of innovative efforts now underway in New Jersey:

Casino gambling revenues enable the New Jersey Division on Aging to fund New Jersey's congregate housing services program. The program provides an array of personal care and housekeeping needs to elderly residents of subsidized and public housing.

The New Jersey Division on Aging and the New Jersey State Bar Association have issued an informative booklet, "Law Points for New Jersey Senior Citizens," which answers common legal questions of special interest to the elderly.

New Jersey's Task Force on Older Workers was formed by the Division on Aging and over 25 business and industry representatives who meet regularly to explore ways to expand employment opportunities for older workers. The division recently received a Federal grant to train business management in aging factors, and a jobs conference brought employers and mature workers together.

In 1983, the division collaborated with the Gerontological Society of New Jersey, Rutgers University, the Older Women's League, and the State division on women to probe issues and plan strategies relating to mature women.

Gov. Tom Kean has designated the division on aging as lead agency in a major elderly health promotion effort.

Negotiations with the New Jersey Dental Association have lead to low-cost dental care for thousands of New Jersey's elderly.

The "graying" of America, however, presents us with a special challenge. In New Jersey alone, while the population grew 2.7 percent between 1970 and 1980, the population of those 60 and above leaped 21.3 percent. By the year 2000, the percentage of New Jerseyites over 60 will grow from the current 16.7 to 18.5 percent.

Nearly 1.3 million Jerseyites are over age 60, yet we are able to serve only a fraction of those eligible. Too many senior citizens are without adequate transportation. Too many of our elderly are lacking decent, affordable health care, and too many who want to work cannot find jobs.

Because of these concerns and others, I brought the Select Committee on Aging to Elizabeth, NJ, on March 19, 1984, for a hearing on "Reauthorization of the Older Americans Act: A New Jersey Perspective." The committee heard from a diverse group of witnesses, including Administration on Aging Commissioner Tolliver, then New Jersey State Division on Aging Director Jacques O. Lebel, Carl West, legislative chairman of the New Jersey Association of Area Agencies on Aging, Joann Maslin, vice president of the Gerontological Society of New Jersey and director of Union County College's gerontology program, Robert Famighetti, director of the Kean College gerontology center, Norman Ellertson, director of New Jersey Green Thumb, and a panel of older New Jerseyites, including Agatha Venezia, Floyd Tucker, Frances Fisher, and Evelyn Frank, president and director of the Senior Citizens Council of Union County. The Honorable Thomas G. Dunn, mayor of the city of Elizabeth, also spoke.

While it was clear from those testifying that Older Americans Act programs and services are run well in New Jersey, each witness made important suggestions for improvement. These views had an impact, and I am pleased to note that many of these recommendations were embodied in H.R. 4785, of which I was cosponsor, as well as the conference report.

Major amendments deal with the following issues:

1. TARGETING OF SERVICES

A major strength of the Older Americans Act is that it is not a welfare program; no income or asset tests apply, and older individuals are free to take advantage of programs and services regardless of economic circumstances. Nevertheless, current law requires that priority be given to those in greatest economic or social need.

According to the Administration on Aging, however, up to one-third of those participating in OAA programs do not fit this rather inexact standard, and minority participation in the congregate nutrition program actually declined from 1981 to 1983. A recent U.S. Civil Rights Commission report further declared that older minority persons were not being served in the same proportion as were nonminority elderly.

The conference report refines this preference by requiring that particular attention be given to low-income minority individuals, and for the first time defines "greatest economic need" and "greatest social need." The bill also requires the Secretary, in evaluating programs under the act, to consult with organizations representing older minority individuals.

Had this legislation come up on the floor under the rule which it had initially been granted as opposed to on the suspension calendar, I had intended to offer an amendment which would have required minority representation on the Federal Council on Aging. The Federal Council, a 15-member group appointed by the President to advise the administration on Federal aging policy, currently has not a single minority member. In fact, in the entire 11-year history of the Council there have been only four black appointees, two Asian-Pacific appointees, two Native American appointees, and one Hispanic member. I am pleased to note, however, that the conference report includes language which will ensure that the Council has minority appointees.

2. TRANSFERABILITY OF FUNDS

The Older Americans Act presaged the renewed emphasis on State and local decisionmaking in that it has always been structured to allow non-Federal agencies and grassroots advisory councils considerable authority to decide how to allocate aging funds within certain statutory guidelines. Witnesses before Select Committee on Aging hearings in 1983 and 1984 testified that still greater flexibility was needed, and that the transferability provision enacted in 1981, which for the first time allowed States to transfer up to 20 percent between the two allotments for nutrition programs—congregate and home delivered meals—and supportive services, should be raised. As Carl West, Legislative Chairman for the New Jersey Association of Area Agencies on Aging observed at my hearing in New Jersey, "an increase will provide greater discretion at the local level to develop comprehensive service delivery systems responsive to the multiple needs of older persons."

While I believe there is justification on the record for a higher percentage, I am pleased that the conference report raises the transferability provision from 20 percent to 30 percent over the next 3 years.

3. ELDER ABUSE

Hearings conducted by the House Aging Committee, including one which I chaired at Kean College of New Jersey in 1980, as well as a recently concluded Justice Department Task Force report and other studies, have documented the growing problem of domestic violence, including crimes against the elderly. State and area agencies, as service coordinators and providers, are in an ideal position to assist in the battle against elder abuse. Title IV funds have already financed three elder abuse demonstration projects utilizing the aging network, and many State and area agencies on aging, including New Jersey's, are actively involved in research, education, and treatment efforts.

By specifying that area agencies must assess the need for services designed to prevent elder abuse and may contract with others to provide such services, the conference report recognizes the aging network's key function in working in a coordinated fashion with other governmental and private agencies in combating this problem.

4. COMMODITIES PROVISION

I am especially pleased that the conference report leaves in place the current provision which provides either commodities or cash in lieu of commodities on a cents-per-meal reimbursement basis to area agencies on aging. Because the law allows reimbursement for each meal served under the aegis of the title III nutrition program, this section provides an incentive for nutrition providers to seek supplemental, non-Federal support for meals provision and rewards efficiency.

The chairman of the Aging Committee's Subcommittee on Human Services [Mr. BIAGGI] and I strongly opposed efforts to do away with this provision, and last year the House passed our bill (H.R. 2807) to raise authorization levels for the program when it became clear that reimbursement requests were exceeding expectations.

5. TITLE V

The Senior Employment Program, currently funded at $317 million and 63,000 jobs, is the only Older Americans Act program administered by the Department of Labor and not by the Administration on Aging within the Department of Health and Human Services. While the Department and the eight national contractors who administer the program have done an excellent job, concern was expressed at the committee's hearings that coordination of employment activities and communication among the national sponsors and the State and area agencies on aging is sometimes deficient. Moreover, while the regulations specify a transition rate goal for title V employees of 15 percent into unsubsidized employment, actual transition rates reported by contractors for the 1982-83 program year range from a high of 34 percent to a low of 8 percent. Likewise, some contractors have been more successful than others in holding their administrative costs to the Department of Labor's 15 percent goal.

I am pleased that the conference report phases in a new statutory administrative cost ceiling of 12 percent in order to maximize funds to older workers. I am also hopeful that consultation and coordination among the national contractors and aging network will improve and that goals for transition rates into unsubsidized jobs will be more uniformly met.

Mr. Chairman, the conference report provides a much-needed requirement that the Commissioner on Aging, in funding demonstration projects, give priority to proposals designed to assist individuals with Alzheimer's disease and their families. The agreement also strengthens the coordinative role of State and area agencies on aging in designing and implementing community-based long-term care systems, and funding authorizations receive a needed but realistic boost.

I want to thank the chairman [Mr. ROYBAL] and my other colleagues on the Aging Committee, particularly Mr. BIAGGI and Ms. SNOWE, as well as the Education and Labor Committee, especially the late chairman, Mr. PERKINS, and Messrs. ANDREWS, ERLENBORN, and PETRI, and other conferees for their leadership in crafting a bill which ensures that the Older Americans Act success story continues unabridged.

I urge adoption of this legislation.●

● Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in enthusiastic support of the conference agreement on the Older Americans Act reauthorization of 1984. This act is the key Federal program which provides supportive services for our older citizens.

Since becoming law in 1965, this act has spurred tremendous progress toward understanding and solving the problems of seniors. The Older Americans Act can be the means by which we reduce duplication of services and eliminate Federal redtape by identifying and delivering services from a local level and by assuring dignity and respect for our senior citizens.

I am encouraged with the provisions in this conference bill that give further discretion to States and local aging offices to determine the mix of services that will meet the area's specific needs. The conference report increases flexibility by increasing the allowed transfer of funds between categorical meal and supportive services programs from the current 20 to 27 percent in fiscal year 1985, increasing to 29 percent and 30 percent in the 2 subsequent fiscal years.

The programs administered through the Older Americans Act are working well as a result of the dedication and enthusiasm of those who coordinate and administer these programs. I am encouraged with the excellent work of the Nebraska Department of Aging under the direction of Helen Boosalis and her predecessor Heather Hong.

Our local aging offices are also doing an outstanding job tailoring services to the needs of the local community. The Eastern Nebraska Office on Aging, in Omaha, has continued this success under the direction of J. Kenton Fancolly, former director, and now under Kay Wallick.

These State and local efforts are complemented with the contribution of volunteers serving on the Department on Aging's and the ENOA's advisory boards. These councils deserve a special tribute.

As we approach the 20th year of the Older Americans Act we must continue efforts to pursue the original intent of the act which is to meet the social service needs of our older citizens in the most effective manner possible.●

● Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the conference committee, I am proud to rise in support of this conference report which reauthorizes certainly one of the finest of all Federal programs—the Older Americans Act. With our passage of this conference report today, we reaffirm that the Older Americans Act is the cornerstone of an enlightened Federal policy of providing services to seniors aimed at promoting independence and dignity.

We have before us not a radical reauthorization proposal but rather a carefully crafted fine tuning of the programs and services under the act. This was done as a reflection of the fact that the act is working and working well across our Nation.

The changes that we have made will provide a blueprint for the continued successful operation of the program. These changes include:

A recognition that the programs and services under title III(B) of the act are most in need of increased funding. The authorization levels agreed to in this bill for title III(B) are the largest increases of any other program in the act. Title III(B) provides such key services as transportation, legal services, and senior center services. It received its first increase in appropriations just 2 months ago under an amendment I authored to the second supplemental appropriations bill.

In addition to the pressures brought to bear on title III(B) in terms of the services it now provides—new pressures have been registered because of increased number of elderly being referred to area agencies on aging because of the DRG system in hospitals. This problem was effectively brought to our attention by my colleague from Maine, OLYMPIA SNOWE. Together we developed legislation to increase funding for title III(B) and while the amounts in this conference report are less than the original proposal—they do reflect the intent of Congress that we must provide additional funds for this section of the act.

The conference report builds upon the successful flexibility features we adopted in the 1981 amendments by increasing the allowable transfer authority between titles III (B) and (C) from the current 20 to 27 percent in fiscal year 1985, 29 percent in fiscal year 1986, and 30 percent in fiscal year 1987. This critical feature allows State and area agencies on aging to target their funds under title III to meet their local needs. It is the expectation of the conferees that a 30-percent transfer will not be needed except in limited areas of the country—but we feel that there should be the flexibility to provide for it if needed.

The conference agreement makes a number of major improvements in the title IV research training and demonstration project program. The key need for this program was to make it more accountable and more coordinated with the other programs in the act. We have accomplished this by building in specific statements of purpose into each section of title IV and mandating more regular reporting of research and training findings.

We have at long last addressed the very real and difficult problems being faced by families of victims of Alzheimer's disease. I was proud to sponsor some of the provisions which will result in increased targeting of funds under title III for families of Alzheimer's victims. These are the funds that can provide the important supportive services which will allow families to better cope with the traumas of this disease.

New language is in this bill which collectively improves the standing of all elements of the aging network. We have for the first time set aside a specific percentage of funds under title III for State administration activities. Under the conference agreement—5 percent of funds or $300,000 would be set aside beginning in fiscal year 1985 and the minimum would be raised to $500,000 as soon as overall appropriations under title III(B) rise to $800 million. For the network of 665 area agencies on aging, the conference report has new language spelling out the rights and responsibilities of triple A's to coordinate community based long term care programs—a critically important concern. Finally with respect to nutrition providers, we have made a small but significant change in their listing under the bill. The change is from "sites" to "programs" which reflects a recognition of both their increased importance and professionalism in the community. Further the bill also gives proper recognition to the role of a provider with previous experience to continue to be awarded nutrition contracts.

The conference agreement does in fact try to guarantee that the responsibilities of the Commission on Aging are no longer eroded by the Office of Human Development Services of HHS. The conference agreement makes it perfectly clear that the Commissioner on Aging have direct reporting responsibilities to the Secretary of Health and Human Services. I like others on the House side would have preferred to maintain the House language which would have elevated the current Administration on Aging and made it into an Office for Aging within the Department of Health and Human Services. This would have allowed the Commissioner to have to report only to the Secretary of HHS not the Office of the Secretary. We did not prevail in the final analysis although the report language makes it clear that the Congress will be monitoring the activities of the Office of the Secretary in this regard. Let me quote from the statement of managers:

> Responsibility for federal aging policy is placed in the Administration on Aging and not in the Office of Human Development Services.

The Commissioner on Aging has suffered enough erosion of her responsibility in recent years and it is time to make the dedicated people in the Administration on Aging more visible.

The conference agreement mandates that regulations to implement this legislation must be promulgated within 120 days after enactment. This is done in large measure to try and avert any repetition of the situation we found ourselves in today—namely, that more than 3 years after the last reauthorization was passed by Congress—there are no implementing regulations. Regulations are important to the smooth implementation of programs and the Older Americans Act is no exception.

I, of course, strongly support the retention of separate funding for nutrition services—both congregate and home delivered which is part of this legislation.

S. 2603 makes the statement that there is very little that must be done to the nutrition program to make it work better. There is an important clarification in the understanding that contributions asked from program participants are to be voluntary and not charges as in present law. The statement of the managers emphasizes the fact that all contributions from participants are to be voluntary and no attempt to coerce should be undertaken.

I regret that we were unable to add any further increases in authorizations for the Home Delivered Meals Program under this act. Under the terms of the Biaggi amendment to the second supplemental appropriations bill, the current appropriation level for the program is not at $67 million—almost the exact level as the authorization. That is a true rarity in programs for appropriations to be so close to authorizations. However this is another program that works and that has a tremendous increase in demand for its services. A survey I commissioned of my Subcommittee on Human Services proved the point in dramatic fashion. Out of 1,200 sites surveyed more than 80 percent cited increased need, the average waiting list had grown to almost 300. This combined with the fact that the average age of participants is now 78 makes the case for both a continuation and expansion of this program.

With respect to the title V program—I am pleased that we have maintained the essence of this most important program and have provided for realistic increases in its funding levels. I cannot lend my full support to the provision which lower the level of administrative costs which might be required by national contractors and State agencies but believe that the conference agreement is far better than the Senate-passed bill especially with its waiver provision.

Also with regard to title V—I was pleased that report language was included which expresses the concern of Congress about any requirement that the Secretary of Labor issue mandating that a specific percentage of workers under title V be transitioned into the private sector. Further I was pleased that a provision I had adopted as an amendment to the House bill was retained in final report language—namely, that in the course of transitioning workers under title V all steps should be taken to exempt those workers in title III programs.

As a cosponsor of the legislation authored by the distinguished subcommittee chairman, Mr. ANDREWS—I am heartened by the conference committee's decision to maintain the new title VII program. Under this new program grants will be provided to universities and colleges, institutions of higher education, and social work, public health institutes to develop programs aimed at enhancing health through nutrition. The conference committee did call for coordination of this program with the aging network which I consider critical for its ultimate success.

I am pleased to note at this juncture that the Senate has already adopted this legislation so all we must do is pass it here and it becomes law. Time is running out on this fiscal year and it is imperative that this program not be allowed to expire.

I am especially pleased to note the provisions contained in title IV of these amendments which seek to upgrade and underscore our continued commitment to education, training, and research programs in aging and for the aged.

These provisions embody the bulk of recommendations advanced by the title IV task force that I convened late last year to discuss programs and services provided by title IV of the act. The intent of the task force was to bring together individuals and organizations from the field, both practitioners and academics, to discuss policy matters related to the reauthorization. The task force met on a monthly basis to review ongoing programs under title IV as well as to prepare legislative recommendations.

These amendments have a threefold policy emphasis: First, to make title IV more visible; second, to make title IV more directly related to the rest of the programs supported by the act, and third, to make title IV more accountable through the upgrading of standards for funding programs and projects and to require publication and dissemination of annual reports to Congress and the aging network.

The major changes in title IV include the following:

Increased authorizations for funding at the following levels: $28.2 million in fiscal year 1985, $29.8 million in fiscal year 1986, and $31.4 million in fiscal year 1987;

Improved accountability by requiring policy impact statements by all grantees and contractors;

Improved coordination between long-term care centers, multidisciplinary centers of gerontology and the aging network by requiring coordination and consultation with State and area agencies on aging so that the products of research by these centers are applicable and useful to service providers;

Increased emphasis on the training and retraining needs of professionals and paraprofessionals to respond to the emerging needs of the field—with required emphasis on support for individuals and programs designed to assist victims of Alzheimer's disease and their families;

Continued support for national legal service support centers which will assist local legal service programs operated through State and area agencies on aging. Support for these national support efforts are critical to assuring adequate legal service programs are available to seniors in those areas of the Nation which fail to have adequately trained personnel;

Increased flexibility with education and training funds by merging State education and training activities—formerly funded at a level of $2.1 million through title IV—with State administrative activities now funded through title III. The conferees expect that the Administration on Aging will seek to assure that States are held harmless at fiscal year 1984 levels and will make title IV funds available in the event that title III appropriations are inadequate to meet this purpose; and

Continued emphasis on the special needs of the minority elderly.

I believe that the revisions in this title will substantially enhance the products of research and training so that they may be more policy oriented and of greater use to the aging network at large—and service providers in particular.

As we examine this legislation in its entirety, we see that it is the product of several years of work not only on the part of the House Education and Labor Committee but another committee I am proud to serve on—the House Select Committee on Aging. This committee and in particular the Subcommittee on Human Services which I chair has done extensive oversight work on behalf of the Older Americans Act. This included a number of hearings from which recommendations did come that became part of the bill before us. Let me again pay tribute to my ranking minority member, Ms. SNOWE, for her work but also pay tribute to my colleague, Mr. RINALDO, ranking minority member of the full committee whose interest in the Older Americans Act is substantial. Also the contributions of my colleagues: Mr. DERRICK, Mrs. BYRON, Mr. BILIRAKIS, Mr. ALBOSTA, and Mr. SHUMWAY, all of whom held hearings specifically on the Older Americans Act in their districts. Finally I wish to pay tribute to the most distinguished chairman of the full Committee on Aging, Mr. ROYBAL, who has been a true and longtime friend of the Older Americans Act and has manifested this through his important service on the Labor-HHS Subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee.

Again I implore my colleagues to pass this important bill. It is a coordinated and comprehensive effort to ensure that the Older Americans Act remains the central Federal program serving the elderly of this Nation. It is also a most remarkable example of bipartisanship and on that note, I wish to salute the outstanding work of the ranking minority member of the Human Resources Subcommittee, Mr. PETRI, as well as the ranking minority member of the full committee, Mr. ERLENBORN of Illinois.

H.R. 4785 will ensure that the success story which has accompanied the Older Americans Act over its almost 20 years will continue and expand over the next 3 years. This legislation was carefully developed with the full and active consultation and participation by all major national aging organizations as well as others on the State and local level. I wish to especially salute those organizations who represent the very core of the "aging network," namely the National Association of State Units on Aging, the National Association of Area Agencies on Aging, the National Association of Nutrition and Aging Service Program, and the National Association on Meals programs. They have all made important contributions not only to this bill but to the successful operation of the act.●

● Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report of S. 2603, the Older Americans Act Amendments of 1984. As chairman of the Select Committee on Aging, I cannot stress enough just how important this legislation is to millions of older Americans. The Older Americans Act sets out a declaration of objectives aimed at improving the lives of older Americans in the areas of income, health, housing, employment, and retirement. Since its inception in 1965, this legislation has been, and continues to be, the primary vehicle for social service delivery to all older Americans.

The conference report agreement authorizes $1.26 billion in fiscal year 1985, $1.31 billion in fiscal year 1986, and $1.37 billion in fiscal year 1987 for nine older Americans programs. Even though the authorization totals are $84.2 million less than the House bill for fiscal year 1985, $87.7 million less than the House bill for fiscal year 1986, and $88.1 million less than the House bill for fiscal year 1987, the agreements total fiscal year 1985 authorization for the eight existing programs is still $160.2 million more than the fiscal year 1984 appropriations. Also, included in this reauthorization are many important technical and strengthening provisions.

This reauthorization will:

Clarify the responsibilities of the Commissioner of the Administration on Aging to assure direct reporting to the Secretary of Health and Human Resources, instead of to the Office of the Secretary.

Require the Administration on Aging to consult with national minority organizations. Require public review and comment of each State's plan to serve those with the greatest social and economic need with special emphasis placed on the definition of "need" regarding minority persons.

Identify Alzheimer's disease as an important concern in research and training projects; including emphasis upon training of paraprofessionals to assist victims and families through title-IV-funded programs. Also services to victims and families are highlighted as priority provisions in the act.

Allow area agencies on aging to operate programs to assist victims of elder abuse and their families.

Place a prohibition against combining Older Americans Act funds with other funds in a combined discretionary grant.

Increase transfer of funds between categorical meal programs and supportive services programs from the current law of 20 to 27 percent in fiscal year 1985, 29 percent in fiscal year 1986, and 30 percent in fiscal year 1987.

Require the issuance of proposed regulations to implement the 1984 amendments within 120 days of enactment. Final regulations must be issued within 90 days.

Create a new title VII, to develop health education and training programs for seniors. This program would provide grants to universities to develop and implement health education programs for the elderly.

In H.R. 5325, the administration's proposed reauthorization of the Older Americans Act, President Reagan shamefully attempted to reduce authorization for these programs by approximately 20.5 percent—a decrease in actual dollars equivalent to almost $860,849,000. He attempted to decrease funding for title IV—research and training—by almost 77 percent, and proposed no extention of authorizations for title V—the only Federal senior employment programs. I am very proud that the conferees did not allow Reagan to once against place the burden of Federal budget cuts on the elderly.

I would like to take this opportunity to commend the conferees for their diligent efforts on behalf of the seniors of this Nation. I especially would like to commend and thank my colleague MARIO BIAGGI for his tremendous contribution as a conferee and as a ranking member of the Select Committee on Aging regarding this reauthorization. Also, I extend my thanks to all members of the Aging Committee for their involvement and commitment to ensure that this reauthorization truly addressed the needs of the seniors of this Nation.

In conclusion, let me say that the Older Americans Act is a landmark piece of legislation. It is the lifeblood to millions of older Americans throughout this Nation. And, I am certain that all my colleagues will join me in support of the conference report on S. 2603, and vote for its immediate approval.●

● Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to join my colleagues today in passing the 1984 Older Americans Act [OAA] amendments. We are reaffirming our commitment to the single most successful program which assists our elderly population in their own homes and communities.

What we have before us is a bill that is the culmination of a long, thoughtful legislative process—a bill which reflects the many suggestions of our service providers and their recipients by strengthening those programs upon which many of our elderly citizens already depend and by redirecting existing programs in response to new trends and new needs.

At this time, I want to commend several of my colleagues and their able staffs who serve on the House Education and Labor Committee for their dedicated efforts in drafting this reauthorization measure as I believe this bill is the best of the compromises that were necessary to accommodate the greatest needs of our older Americans. The committee members were responsive to some of my own suggestions, although I was not a committee member, and I want to publicly recognize their receptiveness to ideas other than their own when drafting the final measure before us today.

I want to pay special tribute to our late friend and colleague, Carl Perkins, a most gracious gentleman and efficient chairman of the Education and Labor Committee. Chairman Perkins was indeed an example for all of us by his unwavering commitment to the improvement of our Nation's programs for the elderly, the young and defenseless, the hungry, and the handicapped. Just one example of his bipartisan and generous attitude was exemplified by his quick acceptance of my suggestion for even higher funding levels for the OAA title III-B programs, which were significantly above the levels recommended in the committee's bill. This is just one example of Chairman Perkins' commitment as a guardian of these services for our senior Americans. We will miss his special and responsive leadership.

In pointing out the increased title III-B authorization levels in the bill before us today, I want to also thank Congressman BIAGGI, a member of the Education and Labor Committee, who, on my behalf, suggested the increased funding targets during the markup session of H.R. 4785. Through our mutual efforts as chairman and ranking minority member of the Aging Subcommittee on Human Services, we came to recognize that hospitals were discharging patients earlier than usual in an effort to reduce costs under the newly implemented diagnostic-related groups [DRG's] reimbursement system. Older patients are depending more and more on those community services such as transportation and day care to assist them over periods of convalescence, a situation unforeseen by Congress when passing the new DRG reimbursement program. By redirecting just a small portion of the savings realized under the DRG ceilings to the OAA community-service programs, we are providing the State area agencies on aging the additional funding they need to meet these new demands. Moreover, more funding will now be needed to allow States to expand their services for Alzheimer victims and their families, services also included in the bill at my suggestion. It was important that the House bill initially reflect these increased demands upon title III-B services as the Senate funding projections did not.

I am especially gratified that Chairman ANDREWS and ranking minority member PETRI of the Subcommittee on Human Services so graciously accepted the language presently in the bill which prioritizes the care of Alzheimer victims and the training of personnel who are responsible for that care in our nursing homes, VA hospitals, home health agencies, and adult-day-care centers. These provisions are identical to legislation I earlier introduced as H.R. 4272 which requires the Commissioner on Aging to give educational grant priority to those students who indicate they will study the custodial or skilled care of victims of Alzheimer's disease and related dementias. And as I mentioned before, State area agencies on aging will now be tasked with providing services to Alzheimer victims and their care-giving families.

It should also be recognized that Senator METZENBAUM later introduced this same legislation in the Senate and Senator GRASSLEY, as chairman of the Senate Aging Subcommittee, incorporated these provisions dealing with Alzheimer's disease training and services in the Senate version of the reauthorization bill as well.

Mr. Speaker, today the Older Americans Act supports 662 area agencies on aging, over 8,600 service providers, 13,000 congregate nutrition sites, and 6,000 home-delivered providers. Older Americans also participate in 54,000 community-service jobs.

In my own home State of Maine, 17 percent of the population is 60 years of age or older. Many of these individuals look to their senior-citizen centers, nutrition programs, employment and community-service jobs funded by the Older Americans Act.

Through the foresight of the OAA, all Americans can face their golden years with increased assurance that they can live independently and productively as long as possible in their own homes and communities. This legislation is truly a legislative success story, and I am most pleased to have played a role in enlarging and enhancing these programs to the betterment of all older Americans.●

● Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, Federal funding for the Older Americans Program should be overwhelmingly supported by the Congress.

The Older Americans Act provides funds for over 3,000 centers across the country and, through these centers, provides services to over 10 million people. The range of services include nutrition programs like Meals on Wheels, which takes a hot meal into people's homes. The program helps senior-citizens centers provide a full range of activities from counseling on life and health insurance to recreation and day-care programs. The Older Americans Act provides transportation to many elderly people who would have no way of going to the doctor or getting out of the house if this help did not exist. It also provides many part-time jobs for older people in community-service work.

This bill provides for a new program of health education for senior citizens. This is especially important because awareness of available medical programs and the importance of prevention of health problems is the major defense the elderly have to protect their lives.

None of us should have to grow old alone. The Older Americans Act reaches out to the elderly and tries to give them contact and support from others when they are less able to care for themselves. The program reaches people where they are. It is based in the community and can reach into the individual home if need be. It is one of the finest examples the good Government can do.

The Older Americans Act is preventive medicine in its best sense. By supporting senior-citizen centers and other programs that bring people together, it helps overcome the lonelinesss and isolation that we see more and more with old age in America because the next generation often lives far away. Medical professionals agree that the feeling of abandonment can be as debilitating to one's health as, for example, pneumonia. Any program that is lifesustaining has my full support.●

● Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference report of the Older Americans Act Amendments of 1984.

I was an original supporter of the Older Americans Act of 1965 and have continued to support legislation which addresses the problems and concerns of this vital segment of our population. Although there are a great number of other programs under which older people may receive assistance, this act is the major vehicle for the organization and delivery of services solely to this group, tailored to meet their special needs.

This legislation was developed under the premise that the Older Americans Act is a Federal program that is working and that is a visible success story throughout our Nation. As a result, we approached this reauthorization with the prevailing sentiment that the most we needed to do was to fine tune the act. This allows for changes to be made to improve and expand the act without radically altering its basic structure and purpose. This has been accomplished in a constructive and bipartisan fashion. The most important element of the reauthorization is that we have extended all programs under the act for 3 additional years as a categorical program.

Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that programs so fundamental to the wellbeing of a growing segment of our population continue to receive the broad support they deserve.●

● Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of the 3-year reauthorization of one of the most important programs considered by this body, the Older Americans Act Amendments. The support that these programs have enjoyed over the years is rarely unequaled, and is indicative of their intrinsic value to the many senior citizens who participate.

I am pleased to see that the Meals on Wheels Program has been authorized at $69 million for fiscal year 1985, with an additional $3 million for fiscal year 1986 and a third-year reauthorization of $75.6 million for fiscal year 1987. This popular and important program is frequently the only contact many homebound seniors have with the outside world, and the knowledge that these men and women are receiving nutritional meals in their own homes is of great comfort to many of us. Of all the programs reauthorized by the conference report, I can think of no more deserving program than this one.

Other provisions of the legislation include the reauthorization at higher levels of the supportive services system, the Congregate Meals Program, and the Community Service Employment Program. A new program as well has been created, that of a grant program for institutions of higher education. These schools can now compete for funding if they have graduate programs in public health, medical sciences, psychology, nursing, social work, education, nutrition, or gerontology and plan to design health education and training programs of relevance and assistance to the senior citizen community. This new grant program is authorized initially at $8.6 million for fiscal year 1985.

Mr. Speaker, the total reauthorization for the next fiscal year is now well over $1 billion. This funding is vitally important to many senior citizens and their families, and is money appropriately earmarked in the Federal budget. I acknowledge my strong support for the levels contained in this conference report, and look forward to continued implementation of the many fine programs carried out by the Administration on Aging.●

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE] has expired and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina.

The Chair would indicate to the gentleman from North Carolina that he has 8 minutes remaining.

Mr. ANDREWS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I should not consume additional time except to say briefly to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PETRI] and to the other minority members of our staff how very much we appreciate their cooperation, the attitude that we approach not only the Older Americans Act but all of the several fine programs we have within our jurisdiction.

He does an excellent job and we appreciate the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN] and may I also join the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PETRI] in paying tribute to our friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ERLENBORN] who is retiring at the end of this session. He has meant much to our subcommittee as well as to the full committee and to all of us individually.

He is always the picture taker when we go on trips and he sends us pictures when we get back and so just in every way he is a distinguished gentleman.

Also to a very fine staff on both sides chaired on this side by Gordon Raley, who is assisted so ably by Trudy Wright, and on that side by our good friend John Dean who is the minority counsel and Ed Larson who works with Mr. PETRI. They are all great people to work with and we appreciate the opportunity to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to associate myself with the subcommittee chairman's remarks and at this time also to recognize the contributions of the ranking minority member on the Special Committee on Aging [Mr. RINALDO] and a fellow member of that committee, the gentlewoman from Maine [Ms. SNOWE].

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time has now expired.

Mr. ANDREWS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 393, nays 2, not voting 37, as follows:

Mr. LOWERY of California and Mr. FRANK changed their votes from "nay" to "yea."

So the conference report was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. ANDREWS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the conference report just concluded and adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. ANDREWS OF NORTH CAROLINA

Mr. ANDREWS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its amendment to the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ANDREWS].

The motion was agreed to.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS TO HAVE UNTIL 12 NOON TOMORROW TO FILE REPORTS ON SUNDRY BILLS

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Ways and Means have until 12 noon Thursday, September 27, 1984, to file its reports on the following bills:

H.R. 6301, Steel Import Stabilization Act;

H.R. 3795, Wine Equity Act;

H.R. 5377, Israel Free Trade Zone Act; and

H.R. 6023, extension of generalized system of preferences.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, these four bills are being dealt with by the Committee on Ways and Means. It is the better procedure to file the reports tomorrow so that our staff does not have to stay until midnight Xeroxing them. Some of these bills will be subject to interesting debate, but the minority believes that this is the best way to bring them forward.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. LOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time so that we can learn the schedule for the balance of the day and, hopefully, the balance of this week and the first part of next week, if not all of it.

For that purpose, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to yield to the distinguished majority leader so the Members will be apprised of the schedule.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, we have only a few more unanimous-consent requests, after which the business for today will have been concluded. Before adjournment today, I shall, in a moment, ask unanimous consent that we adjourn to meet at 10 o'clock on Friday, tomorrow being a high holy day, Rosh Hashana.

Inasmuch as the conferees have already been appointed on the part of the House for the continuing resolution and since the other body will not take up the continuing resolution until Friday, we expect to have only a pro forma session on Friday, with no votes. There will be no legislative votes. It will be a pro forma session, however, to make it possible under the rules for us to proceed. We would expect the other body to complete its action on the continuing resolution on Friday, and that over the weekend the conferees might meet together and hammer out their compromise.

We would expect on Monday to come in at noon. There are some 14 suspensions listed for our consideration so far, but the principal business that we might attend to on Monday and that we hope to attend to on Monday will be the passage of a conference report on the continuing resolution.

The remainder of the business for next week, once the business scheduled for Monday has been disposed of, would include the following:

Debt-limit extension;

The conference report on the budget resolution (H. Con. Res. 280);

Action on a trade bill or bills from the Committee on Ways and Means;

Action on social security cost-of-living adjustments;

Action on an amendment by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JONES], chairman of the Committee on the Budget, calling for a balanced-budget proposal; and

A Tender-Offer Reform Act, subject to the granting of a rule.

Conference reports, of course, may come up at any time.

The principal thing I think Members would want to know is that upon completion of business today we expect to have only a pro forma session on Friday, so that Members might feel free to conduct such business as they may have in their individual districts for the remainder of the week.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, let me address a few questions to the distinguished majority leader.

First of all, are we anticipating at this point completion of the business for this session and for this Congress on Thursday?

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. LOTT. Or Friday? Of course, I know that all will be impacted by what we do on the continuing resolution, for instance, but can we get any indication of what the intentions of the leadership are?

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, if all goes well and according to plan, we will conclude business on Thursday.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. LOTT. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman did not announce on his program a sine die resolution. That is my question. Does he intend to program next week a sine die resolution?

I am trying to preclude the lame-duck issue.

Mr. WRIGHT. That is our expectation. There is no intention on the part of the leadership to come back. I do not think there is any such intention in the other body. I do not believe there is any such plan afoot.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, no more recorded votes are expected today, and no recorded votes will occur on Friday. On Monday we do have a list of 14 suspensions, and we anticipate a vote on Monday on the conference report on the continuing resolution. Now, the gentleman did not mention the possibility of a vote on Monday on the budget resolution.

Is it anticipated that that would come on Tuesday or Wednesday or Thursday instead of on Monday? I ask that because I had understood there had been some discussion about that possibility also.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, we do not have any definite decision on the order in which to bring these various matters up. I think we are going to have to maintain some flexibility in order to get it all done before Thursday night.

Mr. LOTT. So the budget resolution could come up on Monday?

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes, it could. Or any of these other matters we mentioned could be brought up on Monday.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I yield to the distinguished minority leader.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, has the majority leader determined whether or not on Monday the votes would come on the continuing resolution before or after the suspensions? I think that might be a consideration for Members who are on their way back to town and who would feel much more strongly on a vote on that than they would taking their chances perhaps on the suspensions.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, the idea would be that we would like to get the continuing resolution done as soon as we could, because it is the principal business remaining before us.

But I think the gentleman is fully cognizant with the rules and the fact that we probably could not get to any such vote for an hour or more at best. While I am loath to promise Members that there will not be votes in the first hour or so, at the same time I think that is a reasonable expectation.

We would expect to come back in formally at 12 o'clock noon on Monday. If it is possible for us to take up the conference report on the continuing resolution, we would go to that as soon as we could and use these others as fillers, but the probability is that we will not get to it just immediately. There would not be a legislative vote just in the first 5 or 10 minutes.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate hearing that. Most likely the Appropriations Committee will be working around the clock Saturday and Sunday. It would be convenient seeing the fact we are going to be here working if we have to go home to meet some commitments on Sunday night, if we could have a vote maybe later on in the afternoon on Monday. That would give us a chance to go home and come back in time to debate the conference report.

Mr. WRIGHT. Well, in response to the gentleman from Massachusetts, we will try to take those things into account. I am just not at liberty to make a lot of promises that there will not be any votes before a certain hour because we do have this amount of business to attend to, as the gentleman from Massachusetts is aware. All these things must be done before the close of business on Thursday, but we are glad to take that into reasonable account.

Mr. LOTT. It is anticipated and it could be changed, I know, but that we would take up the suspensions first and then have votes on suspensions at the close of the day and the continuing resolution would probably come at the end of the day, too; is that correct?

Mr. WRIGHT. Well, I would think it might be possible that the continuing resolution would be ready in the middle of the afternoon for a vote. I do not know how to guess that.

Mr. LOTT. I understand. I think the Members have the feeling that we have got to be flexible, but they do need to be here for important votes.

Mr. WRIGHT. Members should expect to be here on Monday for votes. We will try not to get to those votes just immediately, but the continuing resolution, I think everybody would agree, has priority and we are going to give it a green light whenever the conferees are ready to go.

Mr. LOTT. In this list of suspensions, is the gentleman going to put those in the record?

Mr. WRIGHT. I will happily include them in the record as an extension of this colloquy, the list of suspensions which we have readied as of this moment for consideration on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The suspensions are as follows:

H.R. 2568, extension of Educational Assistance Program;

H.R. 5361, extension of Prepaid Group Legal Program;

H.R. 6266, Foster Care and SSI Amendments of 1984;

H.R. 6112, unemployment compensation technical adjustment;

H.R. 3510, Sabine River Authority land exchange;

H.R. 6248, Armed Career Criminal Act;

H.R. , Judiciary, Crime Subcommittee's suspension;

H.R. , Judiciary, Crime Subcommittee's suspension;

H.R. 5790, Amusement Park Safety Act;

H.R. 5538, Preventive Health Amendments of 1984;

H.R. 6216, Technical Corrections to the Bankruptcy Act;

H.R. 2790, Colorado River salinity;

H.R. 6101, DOD quarters allowance in Panama Canal Zone; and

S. 1132, Federal Power Act amendments re FERC.

Mr. LOTT. There is no objection, but continuing in the colloquy here, we have on that list, Nos. 7 and 8, two bills which have no identifying number. The only way they are identified for substance, it just says "Judiciary, Crime Subcommittee's suspension." Are they off the list now? It does not indicate a number or substance.

I assume that after the vote yesterday on the omnibus crime package that perhaps those suspensions would not be necessary.

Mr. WRIGHT. Well, I am sure the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi would want us to do everything humanly possible to deter, fight, and oppose crime in all its evil manifestations before we adjourn.

Mr. LOTT. I assure the gentleman that I would, but I think the Members would like to make sure that they actually are fighting crime and not abetting crime.

Mr. WRIGHT. We want to abate, not to abet—never to abet criminals in their evil pursuits, but in every way possible to us to stop them from committing their depredations upon society.

I know the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi shares my enthusiasm for that effort and we want to do everything we can before we adjourn, whatever these bills are, if they fight crime, I know the gentleman from Mississippi will be unanimous in his support for them.

Mr. LOTT. Well, it must be the exclusionary rule from the way the gentleman is talking.

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not have the faintest idea what those bills are. If they are anticrime, I am for them.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. LOTT. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the distinguished majority leader a question, if I may.

I noticed in those items that perhaps will be brought up next week one by Mr. JONES relating to an amendment in the nature of a balanced budget for the Federal Government.

Is the distinguished majority leader of a mind to give us also a vote on the proposed constitutional amendment, H.J. Res. 243, discharge petition 10 now reposing here waiting for signatures? Perhaps the gentleman is of a mind to sign that to assist us to bring that to a vote. Can we get a vote in the 98th Congress on that issue?

If we are going to talk about mandating the President, does the gentleman not think it is accountable for the Members of Congress to tell our constitutents how we stand on this very sensitive issue?

Mr. WRIGHT. I Certainly do and that is the purpose of this bill that the chairman of our Budget Committee is likely to bring forward to us. So far as a constitutional amendment is concerned, I think the gentleman might reasonably conclude that there will not be any vote on a constitutional amendment next week, but rather that this will be a vote on a statutory approach to the balanced budget.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, has this Jones bill to which the gentleman referred had any hearings in committee?

Mr. WRIGHT. I am sure it has been heard as amply and as fully as the constitutional amendment to which the gentleman from California makes reference.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Unfortunately, I suspect that assessment is only too true, I say to the majority leader.

I thank the gentleman for the time.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire on that subject, it does not indicate that that Honorable Jones balanced budget amendment would be subject to a rule being granted. I understand it has not been reported by any committee. What committee would that be coming from, do we have any information on that?

Mr. WRIGHT. Well, it might not even have to have a rule. It might come in a form heretofore unknown.

Mr. LOTT. Well, perhaps from the Democratic Campaign Committee would be the committee that would be reporting that one.

Mr. WRIGHT. Well, the gentleman probably has some knowledge that I do not possess. I imagine the gentleman has been over there looking at those debate books and all those things and therefore he may have information to which I am not privy.

Mr. LOTT. I can see it is going to be very difficult to pin the gentleman on anything this afternoon.

Mr. WRIGHT. It surely is.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I just want to inform the majority leader that in fact several years ago we had a number of hearings on a constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget. I am certain that if the Judiciary Committee wanted to go back and pull those up, there are more than ample hearings that have been held on a constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget. We on this side of the aisle I am certain would be delighted to have an opportunity next week to have both the liberal approach, as offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JONES] and to have a more conservative approach offered that would be real and substantive. I would hope the leadership would consider bringing up both opportunities, both the one as I said, the liberal version offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JONES] and also a more conservative version that we would be glad to support.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, while the distinguished majority leader is standing, I have a question which came to mind a few moments ago when the gentleman was speaking of the question of crime, and that is the conspiracy that seems to be going from one end of these halls to the other in the Capitol, called the Kennedy Center Bailout, or the forgiveness of some $50 million in indebtedness.

We have been quite curious on this side, a few of us, as to whether this is going to come before the Congress this year, and if it did, what shape it would take.

Does the gentleman from Texas know anything about any bill which this might be attached to or anywhere we might look, those of us who are curious, where it is coming from and how it is going to get here?

Mr. WRIGHT. In response to my friend, the gentleman from Florida, I deeply regret that I do not have that information.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

ADJOURNMENT TO FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1984

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 10 a.m. on Friday, September 28, 1984.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO FILE CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 1146, AVIATION DRUG-TRAFFICKING CONTROL ACT

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managers may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report on the Senate bill (S. 1146) to amend the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 to provide for the revocation of certificates and for additional penalties for the transportation by aircraft of controlled substances, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The conference report referred to follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 98-1085)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1146) to amend the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 to provide for the revocation of airman certificates and for additional penalties for the transportation by aircraft of controlled substances, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Aviation Drug-Trafficking Control Act".

SEC. 2. (a) Section 609 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. App. 1429) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"TRANSPORTATION, DISTRIBUTION, AND OTHER ACTIVITIES RELATED TO CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES

"(c)(1) The Administrator shall issue an order revoking the airman certificates of any person upon conviction of such person of a crime punishable by death or imprisonment for a term exceeding one year under a State or Federal law relating to a controlled substance (other than a law relating to simple possession of a controlled substance), if the Administrator determines that (A) an aircraft was used in the commission of the offense or to facilitate the commission of the offense, and (B) such person served as an airman, or was on board such aircraft, in connection with the commission of the offense or the facilitation of the commission of the offense. The Administrator shall have no authority under this paragraph to review the issue of whether an airman violated a State or Federal law relating to a controlled substance.

"(2) The Administrator shall issue an order revoking the airman certificates of any person if the Administrator determines that (A) such person knowingly engaged in an activity that is punishable by death or imprisonment for a term exceeding one year under a State or Federal law relating to a controlled substance (other than any law relating to simple possession of a controlled substance), (B) an aircraft was used to carry out such activity or to facilitate such activity, and (C) such person served as an airman, or was on board such aircraft, in connection with such activity or the facilitation of such activity. The Administrator shall not revoke, and the National Transportation Safety Board on appeal under paragraph (3) shall not affirm the revocation of, a certificate under this paragraph on the basis of any activity if the holder of the certificate is acquitted of all charges contained in an indictment or information which relate to controlled substances and which arise from such activity.

"(3) Prior to revoking an airman certificate under this subsection, the Administrator shall advise the holder thereof of the charges or any reasons relied upon by the Administrator for his proposed action and shall provide the holder of such certificate an opportunity to answer any charges and be heard as to why such certificate should not be revoked. Any person whose certificate is revoked by the Administrator under this subsection may appeal the Administrator's order to the National Transportation Safety Board and the Board shall, after notice and a hearing on the record, affirm or reverse the Administrator's order. In the conduct of its hearings, the National Transportation Safety Board shall not be bound by findings of fact of the Administrator. The filing of an appeal with the National Transportation Safety Board shall stay the effectiveness of the Administrator's order unless the Administrator advises the Board that safety in air commerce or air transportation requires the immediate effectiveness of his order, in which event the order shall remain effective and the Board shall finally dispose of the appeal within 60 days after being so advised by the Administrator. The person substantially affected by the National Transportation Safety Board's order may obtain judicial review of such order under the provisions of section 1006, and the Administrator shall be made a party to such proceedings.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'controlled substance' has the meaning given such term by section 102(6) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802(6)).".

(b) That portion of the table of contents contained in the first section of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 which appears under the side heading is amended by adding at the end thereof

"Sec. 609. Amendment, suspension, and revocation of certificates."

"(c) Transportation, distribution, and other activities related to controlled substances.".

SEC. 3. Section 602(b) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. App. 1422(b)) is amended by inserting "(1)" after "(b)" and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraphs (B) and (C), the Administrator shall not issue an airman certificate to any person whose airman certificate has been revoked under subsection (c) of section 609 of this title during the five-year period beginning on the date of such revocation.

"(B) The Administrator may issue an airman certificate to any such person before the end of such five-year period (but not before the end of the one-year period beginning on the date of such revocation) if, in addition to the findings required by paragraph (1), the Administrator determines (i) that revocation of the certificate for such five-year period would be excessive considering the nature of the offense or the act committed and the burden which revocation places on such person, or (ii) that revocation of the certificate for such five-year period would not be in the public interest. The determinations under clauses (i) and (ii) of the preceding sentence shall be within the discretion of the Administrator and any such determination or failure to make such a determination shall not be subject to administrative or judicial review.

"(C) In any case in which the Administrator has revoked an airman certificate of a person under section 609(c)(1) or (2) as a result of any activity and—

"(i) such person is subsequently acquitted of all charges contained in an indictment or information which relate to controlled substances and which arise from such activity; or

"(ii) in the case of a revocation under section 609(c)(1), the judgment of conviction on which the revocation is based is reversed on appeal; the Administrator shall issue an airman certificate to such person if such person is otherwise qualified to serve as an airman under this section.".

SEC. 4. (a) Section 501(e) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. App. 1401(e)) is amended by inserting "(1)" after "(e)" and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2)(A) The Administrator shall issue an order revoking the certificate of registration issued to an owner under this section for an aircraft and each other certificate of registration held by such owner under this section, if the Administrator determines that—

"(i) such aircraft has been used to carry out an activity, or to facilitate an activity, that is punishable by death or imprisonment for a term exceeding one year under a State or Federal law relating to a controlled substance (other than any law relating to simple possession of a controlled substance); and

"(ii) the use of the aircraft was permitted by such owner with the knowledge that the aircraft was intended to be used for an activity described in clause (i) of this subparagraph.

For purposes of this paragraph, an owner of an aircraft who is not an individual shall be considered to have permitted the use of an aircraft with knowledge that it was intended to be used for an activity described in clause (i) of this subparagraph only if a majority of the individuals who control such owner or who are involved in forming the major policy of such owner permitted the use of the aircraft with knowledge of such intended use. The Administrator shall not revoke, and the National Transportation Safety Board on appeal under subparagraph (B) shall not affirm the revocation of, a certificate under this paragraph on the basis of any activity if the holder of the certificate is acquitted of all charges contained in an indictment or information which relate to controlled substances and which arise from such activity.

"(B) Prior to revoking any certificate of registration under this subsection, the Administrator shall advise the holder thereof of the charges or any reasons relied upon by the Administrator for his proposed action and shall provide the holder of the certificate of registration an opportunity to answer any charges and be heard as to why such certificate should not be revoked. Any person whose certificate of registration is revoked by the Administrator under this subsection may appeal the Administrator's order to the National Transportation Safety Board and the Board shall, after notice and a hearing on the record, affirm or reverse the Administrator's order. In the conduct of its hearings, the National Transportation Safety Board shall not be bound by findings of fact of the Administrator. The filing of an appeal with the National Transportation Safety Board shall stay the effectiveness of the Administrator's order unless the Administrator advises the Board that safety in air commerce or air transportation requires the immediate effectiveness of his order, in which event the order shall remain effective and the Board shall finally dispose of the appeal within 60 days after being so advised by the Administrator. The person substantially affected by the National Transportation Safety Board's order may obtain judicial review of such order under the provisions of section 1006, and the Administrator shall be made a party to such proceedings

"(C) For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'controlled substance' has the meaning given such term by section 102(6) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802(6)).

"(D) Except as provided in subparagraphs (E) and (F), the Administrator shall not issue a certificate of registration to any person who has had a certificate revoked under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph during the five-year period beginning on the date of such revocation.

"(E) The Administrator may issue a certificate of registration for an aircraft to any such person before the end of such five-year period (but not before the end of the one-year period beginning on the date of such revocation) if the Administrator determines that such aircraft is otherwise eligible for registration under this section and (i) that revocation of the certificate for such five-year period would be excessive considering the nature of the offense or the act committed and the burden which revocation places on such person, or (ii) that revocation of the certificate for such five-year period would not be in the public interest. The determinations under clauses (i) and (ii) of the preceding sentence shall be within the discretion of the Administrator and any such determination or failure to make such a determination shall not be subject to administrative or judicial review.

"(F) In any case in which the Administrator has revoked the certificate of registration as a result of any activity and such person is subsequently acquitted of all charges contained in an indictment or information which relate to controlled substances and which arise from such activity, the Administrator shall issue a certificate of registration to such person if such person is otherwise qualified for such a certificate under this section.".

(b) Section 304(a)(9)(A) of the Independent Safety Board Act of 1974 (49 U.S.C. App. 1903(a)(9)(A)) is amended by inserting before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: "and the revocation of any certificate of registration under section 501(e)(2) of such Act".

"TRANSPORTING CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES WITHOUT AIRMAN CERTIFICATE

"(q) Any person who knowingly and willfully serves in any capacity as an airman without an airman certificate authorizing him to serve in such capacity, in connection with the transportation by aircraft of any controlled substance, where (1) such transportation is punishable by death or imprisonment for a term exceeding one year under a State or Federal law or is provided in connection with any act that is punishable by death or imprisonment for a term exceeding one year under a State or Federal law relating to a controlled substance (other than any law relating to simple possession of a controlled substance), and (2) such person has knowledge of such transportation, shall be subject to a fine not exceeding $25,000 or to imprisonment not exceeding five years, or to both such fine and imprisonment. JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1146) to amend the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 to provide for the revocation of airman certificates and for additional penalties for the transportation by aircraft of controlled substances, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House amendment struck out all of the Senate bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House with an amendment which is a substitute for the Senate bill and the House amendment. The differences between the Senate bill, the House amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

REVOCATION OF AIRMAN'S CERTIFICATE

Senate bill

Requires the Federal Aviation Administrator to revoke a person's airman certificate when the airman has been convicted of a violation of any State or Federal felony law relating to controlled substances (other than simple possession) and it is determined that that person knowingly served as an airman in connection with such violation or was on board the aircraft in connection with the offense; or when the Administrator determines that (A) such person has engaged in an activity which he knew, or had reasonable cause to know, was intended to distribute, export, or import a controlled substance, (B) an aircraft was used in such activity, or to facilitate such activity, and (C) such distribution, exportation, or importation was not authorized by any Federal or State law.

The first avenue of appeal from the Administrator's determination would be a full evidentiary hearing before the National Transportation Safety Board. Following that, a judicial review of the Board's order could be obtained pursuant to Section 1006 of the Act.

The bill also provides that the Administrator may not revoke the airman certificate of a person who has been acquitted of charges related to the activity relied upon for the revocation. Neither the Administrator nor the Board shall have authority to review the findings of any state or federal court as to any element of proof required by the Section.

House amendment

Requires revocation of an airman's certificate if the holder is convicted for violation of any State or Federal law relating to controlled substances (other than a law prohibiting simple possession) and the FAA Administrator determines either that the certificate holder knowingly served as an airman or was on board the aircraft in connection with the violation.

Requires revocation of an airman's certificate if the Administrator determines that the holder knowingly served as an airman or was on board the aircraft in connection with transportation by aircraft of a controlled substance if such transportation is prohibited by State or Federal law relating to controlled substances (other than a law prohibiting simple possession of a controlled substance).

Before an airman's certificate is revoked under the foregoing provision, the holder must be given notice and an opportunity for a hearing on the record as to why the certificate should not be revoked. A person whose certificate is revoked may obtain judicial review under Section 1006 of the Federal Aviation Act.

The Administrator has no authority to review the elements of the substantive criminal offense if an individual has been convicted by an appropriate State or Federal court. Conversely, the Administrator may not revoke an airman certificate if the holder thereof has been acquitted of the substantive criminal offense charged.

Conference substitute

Requires the Administrator to revoke an airman's certificate when the airman has been convicted of a felony violation of a State or Federal law relating to controlled substances (other than simple possession) if the Administrator determines that (a) an aircraft was used in the commission of the offense or to facilitate the commission of the offense, and (b) the airman served as an airman or was on board the aircraft in connection with the commission of the offense or the facilitation of the commission of the offense. The phrase "facilitate the commission of the offense" has been added to cover situations where the aircraft is not actually used to carry the drugs, but is still involved with the illegal transaction in some other way, such as by acting as a spotter plane, or by use of the aircraft to transport participants in an illegal drug transaction to a meeting. The Administrator shall have no authority to review the issue of whether the airman violated a State or Federal law relating to a controlled substance.

The Conference Substitute further provides that the Administrator shall revoke an airman's certificate if the Administrator determines that the airman knowingly engaged in an activity which would constitute a felony violation of a State or Federal law relating to a controlled substance other than simple possession; an aircraft was used to carry out such activity or to facilitate such activity; and the person served as an airman or was on board the aircraft in connection with the activity or the facilitation of the activity.

An airman whose certificate is revoked by the Administrator under this provision may appeal the Administrator's order to the National Transportation Safety Board which shall, after notice and a hearing on the record, affirm or reverse the Administrator's order. A person whose certificate is revoked may obtain judicial review under Section 1006 of the Federal Aviation Act. Neither the Administrator nor the NTSB shall have authority to revoke a certificate under this provision if the airman is acquitted of criminal charges relating to the activity involved.

This section of the Conference Substitute is not intended to take away FAA's general authority under existing law to suspend or revoke an airman's certificate (or to take other appropriate action) when an airman violates the criminal drug laws or FAA's regulations on drugs. When an airman engages in activities which come within the provisions added by the Conference Substitute, FAA should proceed under these provisions. But for other violations which do not come within the new provisions, FAA retains its existing authority to take appropriate action.

The conferees expect FAA to use all of the new authority in the conference bill. One of the provisions added by the conference permits FAA to proceed against individuals who have engaged in activities which are prohibited by state or federal drug laws, but who have not been convicted of a drug law offense. This provision would permit FAA to take action when, for example, an airman is not prosecuted because of the heavy work load of a prosecutor's office or an airman is not convicted because of technicalities which apply to criminal proceedings but not to administrative proceedings involving loss of a license.

The provision in the House bill on this issue requires FAA to find that the airman has engaged in an activity which is prohibited by a State or Federal law relating to a controlled substance. At the House hearings, FAA expressed some concern over this section of the bill on the ground that "This could require the FAA to essentially have to prove the whole criminal case against an individual." We have considered this concern, but have decided to retain the approach of the House bill of describing the activities which are prohibited by reference to state and federal criminal law. The alternative would be to describe in the aviation drug bill itself all of the elements of a violation. This would have required drafing of a bill which would approach the criminal drug law in complexity and would require FAA and NTSB to develop a line of precedents interpreting the new statutory language. In our judgment the simpler and preferable approach is to describe the prohibited activities by reference to existing criminal laws and the cases which have interpreted these laws.

It should be clearly understood that the reference to existing criminal law applies only to the elements of the violation. We do not intend to require FAA or NTSB to follow criminal law procedures or standards of proof. These matters will be determined by general principles of administrative law applicable to license revocation cases.

We are confident that FAA's enforcement attorneys and the NTSB will be able to determine the elements of a violation by reference to the criminal drug laws and their judicial precedents. We expect FAA to utilize the new provisions of law in all appropriate cases and the House and Senate authorizing committees will be closely monitoring FAA's enforcement actions.

The title in existing law which is amended by the conference bill deals not only with airman's certificates, but also with FAA's power to issue certificates and otherwise regulate airports and air agencies. The conferees are concerned about certain recent FAA actions in this area, in particular the existing FAA regulations governing aircraft fueling operations. Under Section 139.51 of the Federal Aviation Regulations, airport operators are required to ensure that those who engage in fueling operations are adequately trained and use appropriate procedures for storing, dispensing, and handling fuel. In so doing, the agency has chosen to regulate aircraft fueling operations indirectly through contracts between airport operators and tenants rather than directly as in the case with others who perform functions critical to the safety of flight.

The conferees believe that FAA's current practice of requiring certificated airports to monitor the safety of tenant fueling operations is not in the best interests of aviation safety. When it comes to an issue of aviation safety, the role of the FAA should be to solve the problem rather than past the buck. Unless they are also engaged in the storage, dispensing, or handling of fuel, local airport officials generally are not qualified to determine the safety of these operations nor should they be expected to enforce penalties against tenants whose fueling operation are unsafe. In addition, we question whether it is desirable to regulate fueling operations only at certificated airports, since this means that fueling at non-certificated airports is not addressed in any meaningful way.

Accordingly, the conferees direct the FAA to adopt an alternative approach to deal with this problem so that aircraft fueling is monitored more effectively than it is today. Although we concur in the FAA's recent legal opinion that it possesses the authority under Section 607(3) of the Federal Aviation Act to issue certificates to personnel and facilities engaged in fueling operations, we believe the agency should, to the maximum extent feasible, encourage voluntary industry efforts to address these concerns.

TERMS OF REVOCATION

Senate bill

This section provides that the Administrator shall not issue a new airman certificate to someone who has had their certificate revoked pursuant to the preceding Section for a period of five years. The Administrator may, after one year, issue a new certificate if he finds that the 5-year period would be excessive or not in the public interest. A denial of a new certificate in the 1-5 year period would not be reviewable. If an airman's certificate is revoked and he is subsequently acquitted of all pending criminal charges against him, the Administrator must reissue his certificate if he meets all appropriate FAA safety regulations.

House amendment

Similar to Senate bill.

Conference substitute

Similar to Senate bill. Further provides that if an airman's certificate is revoked upon the basis of a conviction and the conviction is reversed on apeal, the revocation based on the judgment of conviction shall not be valid.

REVOCATION OF CERTIFICATE OF AIRCRAFT REGISTRATION

Senate bill

This section would require the Administrator to revoke the registration of an aircraft and other registration certificates held by the same owner based on the following criteria:

(1) Such aircraft has been used in an activity, or to facilitate an activity that is a felony violation of any law (other than simple possession) relating to a controlled substance; and

(2) The use of the aircraft was permitted by such owner who knew, or had reasonable cause to know, that the aircraft was intended to be used in such activity.

If a person's certificate is revoked under this Section, the Administration shall not issue a new certificate to that person for five years, except that the five years may be reduced to not less than one year as provided in the Sections on revocation of airman's certificates.

The owner of an aircraft who is not an individual shall be considered to know, or to have reasonable cause to know the intended use of an aircraft only if a majority of the individuals who control the owner or form major policy have the required knowledge.

The same procedural safeguards apply to the revocation of an aircraft registration certificate as to the revocation of an airman certificate.

House amendment

Provides that a certificate of registration, and all other certificates held by the same owner, must be revoked if the Administrator determines that the owner has knowingly permitted the aircraft to be used to transport a controlled substance, and such transportation violates State or Federal law or is in connection with any act prohibited by State or Federal law relating to controlled substances (other than simple possession). If the aircraft owner is not an individual, the test of knowledge is that a majority of the individuals who control the owner or are involved in forming the major policy of the owner must have the required knowledge. If a certificate of registration is revoked under this provision, the holder of the certificate may not apply for any other certificate of registration for five years. The five years may be reduced to not less than one year under standards similar to those described in preceding sections of on airman's certificates. The procedures required for revocation are the same as the procedures described in preceding sections on revocation of an airman's certificate.

Conference substitute

Provides that the Administrator shall revoke all certificates of registration held by an aircraft owner if the Administrator determines that the owner's aircraft has been used to carry out an activity or to facilitate an activity that is a felony violation of a state or federal law relating to a controlled substance and the use of the aircraft was permitted by the owner with knowledge that the aircraft was intended to be used for this activity. An aircraft owner who is not an individual shall be considered to have permitted the use of the aircraft with knowledge that it was intended for these purposes only if a majority of the individuals who controlled such owners or who are involved in forming the major policy of the owner permitted the use of the aircraft with the knowledge of such intended use. The procedures to be followed and the term of revocation are similar to the provisions in the section on revocation of an airman's certificate.

CRIMINAL PENALTIES FOR ACTING AS AN AIRMAN WITHOUT A CERTIFICATE IN CONNECTION WITH DRUG VIOLATION

Senate bill

No comparable provision.

House amendment

Provides that a person who knowingly acts as an airman without a certificate in connection with a violation of State or Federal controlled substance laws (other than simple possession) shall be subject to a fine of up to $25,000 and imprisonment of up to five years.

Conference substitute

Provides that any person who knowingly serves as an airman without an airman's certificate in connection with transportation which is a felony violation of a state or federal law pertaining to controlled substances (other than simple possession) shall be subject to a fine not exceeding $25,000 or imprisonment not exceeding five years.

CRIMINAL PENALTIES FOR FRAUDULENT CERTIFICATES

Senate bill

Under current law a person using fraudulent version of certificates authorized under the Federal Aviation Act or displaying false aircraft registration markings is subject to a fine of up to $1,000 and imprisonment of up to three years. This Section adds to the offenses subject to these criminal penalties the offense of selling fraudulent certificates or possessing these certificates with the intent to use them. The Section further provides that if the prohibited acts occur with intent to commit any act prohibited by State or Federal felony law relating to controlled substances (other than simple possession) the offender shall be subject to a fine of up to $25,000 and imprisonment of up to five years. The same penalty is provided for a person who sells a fraudulent certificate with the knowledge that the purchaser intends to use the certificate in connection with any act prohibited by any State or Federal felony law relating to controlled substances (other than a law relating to simple possession).

House amendment

Same, except does not include limitation to felony violation.

Conference substitute

Similar to Senate bill.

AUTHORIZING PRINTING AS HOUSE DOCUMENT OF COMMITTEE PRINT ENTITLED "FBI UNDERCOVER OPERATIONS"

Mr. GAYDOS, from the Committee on House Administration, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 98-1083) on the resolution (H. Res. 577) authorizing the printing as a House document of the committee print entitled "FBI Undercover Operations," which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed.

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I call up House Resolution 577, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mrs. VUCANOVICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman please explain his request?

□ 1420

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 577 authorizes the printing as a House document of the committee print entitled "FBI Undercover Operations," this report was prepared by the Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights of the Committee on the Judiciary after an intensive 4-year study. The Committee on House Administration approved this resolution on September 26, 1984. The resolution provides that the usual number of 1,500 copies shall be printed pursuant to the requirements of the applicable statute, sector 701 of title 44 of the United States Code and that 2,000 additional copies shall be printed for the use of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The estimated cost of the printing, provided by the Government Printing Office, is as follows:

Usual number of 1,500 copies (statutory requirement)	$2,686.52
Additional 2,000 copies	1,197.00
Total cost	3,883.52

This report sets forth the results of 4 years of intense scrutiny by the Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights of the policies, procedures, and practices of the FBI in authorizing and conducting criminal investigations involving undercover agents, during those years, 1980-83, the FBI budget for such programs expanded from $1 million to over $6 million; and the FBI has been appropriated $12.5 million to continue undercover activities in fiscal year 1985.

The report which was originally issued on May 1, 1984, made several recommendations on the need for legislation to govern the future conduct of undercover operations. It is expected that the bill which will be introduced will involve thorough and spirited legislative debate. It will become one of the major congressional initiatives of the 99th Congress.

It should, also, be noted that the recent DeLorean and Greylord trials with their extensive media coverage, have aroused widewpread public interest in the subject matter of this committee report.

The committee's initial allotment of 1,000 copies was exhausted by July 9 as a result of the widespread demand for this document from Members of Congress, legal scholars, lawyers presently involved in litigation, journalists, court administrators, and the general public. This printing resolution should provide for an adequate number of additional copies to meet the committee's needs as it prepares for legislation.

Mrs. VUCANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, I do not object to this request, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 577

Resolved, That the committee print of the report of the Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights of the Committee on the Judiciary, entitled "FBI Undercover Operations", dated April 1984, shall be printed as a House document.

SEC. 2. In addition to the usual number, there shall be printed 2,000 copies of such document for the use of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, having already explained this matter, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the resolution just agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

TERRITORIAL DEVELOPMENT FUND ACT OF 1983

Mr. WON PAT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 2955) to facilitate economic development in the territories of the United States through the mobilization of private capital and skills, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Guam?

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I rise in support of H.R. 2955 with committee amendments.

This bill is a bipartisan effort to clarify the tariff schedules as they apply to the U.S. territories. General headnote 3(a) of the U.S. tariff schedules is a principal element of the bipartisan national policy of developing territorial economies for three decades. It was intended to give our territories, which are outside the U.S. Customs zone, a statutory trade advantage over foreign jurisdictions. Such an advantage is essential if the territories, as U.S. islands with U.S. costs of doing business, are to compete with their regional neighbors.

Regulations have recently been issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, pursuant to the Agriculture Act of 1956 as amended and erroneously applied to the U.S. territories. To correct this oversight, this legislation merely restates the authority under which general headnote 3(a) applies to the territories: that is the respective organic acts of Guam and the U.S. Virgin Islands, the joint resolution confirming the cession of American Samoa and the Northern Marianas covenant. That is H.R. 2995 merely restores the status quo.

Enactment of H.R. 2955 does not necessarily mean that revision of territorial policy derived from general headnote 3(a) is entirely satisfactory. On the contrary, the practice of employing alien labor in some of the territories needs investigation. In order to stimulate the insular economies, I propose that enactment of this legislation constitutes a commitment by the U.S. House of Representatives to conduct oversight hearings on this matter in the subsequent Congress. As a goal, I would suggest that the territorial governments would strive to have at least 50 percent local hire within the first year or enactment of this legislation to qualify for headnote 3(a) advantages; 65 percent local hire within 2 years; and 80 percent local hire within 3 years.

Mr. Speaker, although H.R. 2955 is merely clarifying legislation, it is necessary to eliminate confusion which currently exists in the insular areas—confusion, which if allowed to continue, may seriously jeopardize current as well as future economic development in the territories. I, therefore, urge my colleagues to lend their unanimous support in passage of H.R. 2955.

Mr. Speaker, under my reservation I would ask the gentleman from Guam: is it the intention of the gentleman to offer the amendment in the nature of a substitute that was worked out with the minority?

Mr. WON PAT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. I yield to the gentleman from Guam.

Mr. WON PAT. Yes; it is. My amendment is the amendment which we worked on together to preserve an essential incentive economic activity in the smaller territories of the United States.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. I thank the gentleman, and I withdraw my reservation of objection and urge approval.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Guam?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so for the purposes of yielding to the distinguished gentleman from Guam so that he might tell the House what he is doing and what is this amendment that has been worked out.

Mr. WON PAT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Guam.

Mr. WON PAT. The amendment is intended to do away with the application of regulations relating to the importation of manufactured textiles from foreign countries to the territories and to protect them from being affected by any similar regulations because such regulations contravene the provisions of law relating to the entry of products from the territories other than Puerto Rico.

Mr. FRENZEL. The problem is the country of origin's determination by the Department of Treasury, the recent regulations?

Mr. WON PAT. They would supercede general headnote 3(a) of the Tariff Schedules.

Mr. FRENZEL. So it would allow the territories who are doing some conversion of materials which are primarily manufactured elsewhere to continue to be able to do their additional work and then ship them to the United States?

Mr. WON PAT. Yes, the intent is to preserve the entry requirements of headnote 3(a) and prevent others from being applied, whether they deal with duties directly or country of origin.

Thus, territorial products—those wholly or partially manufactured in a territory—would still have to adhere to the prescribed limitations of headnote 3(a). Of course, there is no intent to diminish any other more beneficial provisions of law which may apply to territorial products in existing law.

As indicated in my colloquy with the distinguished ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Insular Affairs which I chair, this amendment was worked out with your side of the aisle.

It was also developed in consultation with the Committee on Ways and Means, through the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Trade; the representatives of all the territories affected; and the Executive's office responsible for the territories, the Interior Department's Office of Territorial and International Affairs.

As I am sure the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota is aware, headnote 3(a), which provides for the entry into the United States of territorial products, was applied to the territories through provisions of territorial legislation. In the case of my own territory of Guam and the Virgin Islands, this was through our organic acts. In the case of the Northern Mariana Islands, this was through the covenant which established the relationship between the territory and the United States. In the case of American Samoa, this was pursuant to the resolution accepting the treaty by which those islands became a territory.

Thus, as members of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, which has jurisdiction over territorial legislation, we have a strong concern about these textile regulations or any others which might be applied to the importation of products from the territories which contravene the intent of headnote 3(a).

This concern was evidenced in a letter that the gentleman from California and I sent along with the distinguished chairman of the full committee and the distinguished ranking minority member of the full committee to the Secretaries of Interior, Treasury, and Commerce and the Trade Representative concerning the textile regulations.

For the benefit of Members, the text of the letter to Secretary Clark, which is identical to the letters to the other Members of the President's Cabinet reads as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, September 5, 1984.

Hon. WILLIAM P. CLARK,
Secretary, Department of the Interior, Washington, DC.

DEAR SECRETARY CLARK: We are most concerned about the implications for the territories of the United States of interim regulations on textile imports issued pursuant to Executive Order 12475 and which are scheduled to go into effect September 7, 1984 and October 31, 1984.

An immediate concern is the impact that the regulations will have on existing territorial textile businesses and the relatively substantial employment and revenues that they generate. These companies contend that the regulations will make it impossible for them to continue to operate.

Because of the federal responsibility for the territories, such an impact could have consequences for the federal government in addition to those which would be created for the economies and governments of the territories.

Our more fundamental concern is that the regulations appear to contravene the intent, and perhaps the letter, of the General Headnote 3(a) of the Tariff Schedules. The possibility that the standards contained in these regulations will be used to guide policy in the future concerning the importation of other articles deepens this concern.

As you know, Headnote 3(a) has been a principal element of the bipartisan national policy of developing territorial economies for three decades. It was intended to give our territories, which are outside the U.S. customs zone, a statutory trade advantage over foreign jurisdictions. Such an advantage is essential if the territories, as U.S. islands with U.S. costs of doing business, are to compete with their regional neighbors.

The regulations would eliminate the Headnote 3(a) advantage on textile products which has been a primary incentive for territorial production. They would do this by substituting new rules of origin tests for those currently applied to territorial products under Headnote 3(a). They would do this irrespective of the extent to which the territories are a factor in existing textile quota abuse.

We understand the need to respond to serious concerns about the abuse of textile quota restrictions worldwide. But we do not believe that new standards on territorial imports should be imposed until the potential impact on the territories, the implications for the continued viability of Headnote 3(a), and the relationship of territorial production to quota abuse have been evaluated.

Thus, we request that these regulations not be applied to the territories until Congress and the administration have had an opportunity to consider these questions. As leaders of the committee of the House with jurisdiction over legislation affecting the territories, we will commit to an expeditious review of these questions with appropriate administration officials.

Sincerely,

Morris K. Udall, Chairman, Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs; Antonio B. Won Pat, Chairman, Subcommittee on Insular Affairs; Manual Lujan, Jr., Ranking Republican, Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs; Robert J. Lagomarsino, Ranking Republican, Subcommittee on Insular Affairs.

In response, we have received the following communications from Amabassador Brock and Assistant Interior Secretary Montoya:

THE U.S. TRADE REPRESENTATIVE,
Washington, September 24, 1984.

Hon. MORRIS K. UDALL,
House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MO: Thank you for the letter of September 5 from you and your colleagues on the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee concerning the effect on the United States territories of the new Customs regulations on the country of origin rule. I appreciate hearing from you on this issue.

I recognize that a problem may exist in administering Headnote 3(a) of the Tariff Schedules in light of the new regulations. This is a difficult issue and one which we are currently addressing with representatives of the territories and other government agencies. Just last week my Chief Textile Negotiator, Ambassador Richard Imus, met with a delegation of officials and businessmen headed by Rex Kosak, Attorney-General of the Northern Marianas.

I want to assure you that we recognize our special commitment to the needs of the American insular areas. We are moving as expeditiously as possible to determine whether there is any solution to the problem.

Again thank you for sharing your views with me.

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM E. BROCK.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, DC, September 17, 1984.

Hon. MORRIS K. UDALL,
Chairman, Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Secretary Clark has asked me to thank you and respond to the September 5, 1984 letter from you and the other members of the Committee regarding interim textile regulations and your concern over their impact on the U.S. territories. Please be assured that we have given this matter our complete attention during the past several months and will continue to work on the issue within the Administration.

As you may be aware, the regulations were issued by the Department of the Treasury based upon the policy guidance of the Committee for the Implementation of Textile Agreements (CITA) located in the Department of Commerce. Any exemption from the regulation granted to the U.S. territories would have to be provided by the Department of the Treasury.

The Department of the Interior has for several weeks been working with interested territorial parties to seek relief from the interim textile regulations. I have personally made onsite visits to textile manufacturing firms in Guam and the Northern Mariana Islands. My staff and I have held numerous meetings with territorial representatives and have arranged meetings for them with the Department of Commerce and U.S. Customs Service, in addition to our working within the Administration with the support of the Secretary.

We will continue to work along the lines of the compromise I suggested during the recent U.S. Investment Tour of the Pacific Territories. The proposal would involve a requirement of hiring local residents of the territories, as opposed to foreign workers for the textile factories, as is presently done in some cases. This ensures that real economic benefit is provided to the territories under the privilege of Headnote 3(a). The proposal also involves a ceiling on the amount of territorial textile production allowed duty-free access under the regulations. Certification would be jointly performed by Commerce and Interior, similar to the current watch quota program.

Prior to putting our final comments in writing to the Department of the Treasury, my staff will consult with territorial representatives to ensure a full and fair hearing of all concerns.

As I have stated before, however, the mainland textile industry and the U.S. Departments of the Treasury and Commerce will need to be forcefully apprised by all interested parties, of the benefits of Headnote 3(a) textile production to the United States before an exemption is made for the territories.

Secretary Clark and I fully understand the concerns expressed by your letter. You can be assured that we will continue in our effort to make the impact of the interim textile regulations on the U.S. territories fully understood by the appropriate officials.

Given the strength of the mainland textile industry, and absent additional statutory protection for Headnote (3)a industries, I am sure you appreciate the spirit in which the Department's territorial compromise on the interim textile rules is offered.

With best wishes.

Sincerely,

RICHARD T. MONTOYA,
Assistant Secretary, Territorial and International Affairs.

So, there is some recognition within the administration of the problem.

Unfortunately, that understanding has not yet led the administration to take coorective action. Territorial manufacturers, who account for a miniscule amount of textile imports but contribute significantly to territorial economies, are still faced with regulations that could put them out of business. The irony of this is that they are every bit as much domestic industries as the firms that the regulations are designed to protect. And there is the danger that the approach of these regulations would be tried with respect to other products.

All of this calls into question the viability of headnote 3(a). If regulations such as these country of origin regulations are able to prevent headnote 3(a) from functioning, what assurance is there in headnote 3(a)? What incentive is headnote 3(a) providing to establish manufacturing in the territories and thereby develop their economies?

The intent of headnote 3(a) is well described in a Senate Finance Committee report on legislation which amended that statute. It reads:

The 1954 statute not only provided uniformity of treatment among the possessions but it was calculated to, and in effect has, stimulated the development of light industry in the possessions. The development of light industry has helped the economy of the possessions, particularly the Virgin Islands, where numerous new businesses have been established to produce or assemble various articles for duty-free shipment to the United States.

It is not the sponsors' intent here to take issue with the wisdom of the textile regulations as a whole. Rather, this legislation asserts that they or similar regulations, cannot be applied to or affect products of the territories. Only regulations issued pursuant to headnote 3(a) are to be applied to or affect territorial products.

It was our expectation that the textile regulations would have made appropriate provisions for the territories; that they would not have effectively superceded headnote 3(a) requirements. But we were disappointed in this as we have been in the failure of the administration to take corrective action so far. It makes no sense because territorial production poses no threat to other American production.

If the administration desires to impose new regulations on territorial products, under this legislation they would have to be issued under and consistent with headnote 3(a). If something else is desired, the adminsitration should propose it to the Congress.

Only by law should the Federal Government be able to alter this important element of the fiscal relationship between the territories and the United States.

That law is not section 204 of the Agricultural Act of 1956 as amended under which the textile regulations were promulgated. The foreign affairs function of the Executive may be sufficient authority for applying country of origin regulations with respect to foreign products; but it is not for territorial products.

Again, there is only one law that confers authority for setting requirements on territorial products and that is headnote 3(a).

The letter from Assistant Secretary Montoya makes clear that there is some feeling within the executive that headnote 3(a) requirements need to be altered in one respect. Consistent with the intent of headnote 3(a) to stimulate local employment, Interior feels that limitations on the employment of foreign nationals in headnote 3(a) plants should be imposed.

This is particularly a concern with respect to manufacturing operations in the Northern Marianas, which control their own immigration.

Interior has raised a point worthy of exploration, as has my colleague from California. I agree that the issue ought to be examined. If a primary purpose in headnote 3(a) is to create local employment, is the use of a significant percentage of foreign nationals who may reside temporarily in a territory consistent with the purpose?

However, consideration of this should be in the context of headnote 3(a) regulations or legislation not proposals whose real target is foreign imports. Therefore, I believe that the administration is justified in looking at the question and that it should bring any recommendations it may wish to make to the next Congress but that the question should not cloud this debate. My subcommittee will work with the Subcommittee on Trade in reviewing any such recommendations.

Obviously, the textile regulations make our action today imperative. But, as I have explained, they are not the sole cause of the problem we seek to correct. It is broader than that. Our goal is to provide assurance to existing and potential headnote 3(a) investors that this element of the Federal territorial fiscal relationship cannot be compromised by regulatory actions dealing with other problems.

We became convinced of the need for some action on my subcommittee's recent visit to Guam and the Northern Marianas and some of the headnote 3(a) textile plants there. We saw how substantial the work that they perform is and learned how substantially they contribute to the local economies in terms of revenue and employment.

We are compelled to take action now because of the administration's inaction to date to protect territorial, as American, manufacturers from regulations that should only affect foreign firms. The need is for expeditious action late in the life of this Congress and that is what we propose in this amendment. We would, as I have indicated, expect to deal more comprehensively with any headnote 3(a) problems in the next Congress.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to include a letter from the distinguished Representative of the Virgin Islands who is with us here on the floor. It succinctly states our purpose.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, September 26, 1984.

Hon. ANTONIO WON PAT,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Insular Affairs, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I support the amendment to H.R. 2955 which you intend to offer on the floor of the House today on behalf of all of the territorial Representatives. It is imperative that businesses operating or planning to locate in the territories have the assurance that the benefits offered under Headnote 3(a) of the Tariff Schedules of the United States are not unintentionally undermined.

Headnote 3(a) is the result of a decision by Congress to provide a specific trade preference for the U.S. territories, one which is over and above any offered to foreign jurisdictions. This cannot be undermined by regulatory activity of the federal government, whether intended for the Headnote 3(a) program, or affecting it as part of a sweeping change in trade policy.

This amendment is necessary in order to clarify and underscore the extent to which Congress delegated its Constitutional jurisdiction over the territories under Headnote 3(a).

Sincerely,

RON DE LUGO,
Member of Congress.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, this bill, in my judgment, will, if passed, effectively negate unwise and ill-founded regulations recently promulgated by the Treasury Department which would change traditional country of origin rules with respect to textile products, or originating abroad but shipped to the United States through our territories in which some manufacturing or conversion is done.

The Treasury regulation changes well undertsood rules on which commerce has depended. The passage of H.R. 2955 will require Treasury to bring in proposed changes in law if it insists on making major policy changes in U.S. Trade Law.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Guam?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

H.R. 2955

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Territorial Development Fund Act of 1983".

SEC. 2. There is authorized to be appropriated $2,000,000 for fiscal year 1984 for private sector project development costs associated with a Territorial Development Fund for Guam, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, and the Northern Mariana Islands: Provided, That such appropriated funds shall not be expended until enactment of legislation that establishes the administrative structure of and eligibility requirements for such a fund and that such a fund shall be limited to providing financial assistance to private sector development projects only.

AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE OFFERED BY MR. WON PAT

Mr. WON PAT. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Guam?

There was no objection.

The text of the amendment in the nature of a substitute is as follows:

Amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by Mr. WON PAT: Strike all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That in order to protect, promote and enhance the economic development of Guam, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, and the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands pursuant to the provisions of section 27 of the Organic Act of Guam (64 Stat. 392, as amended, 48 U.S.C. 1421e), section 28(d) of the Revised Organic Act of the Virgin Islands (68 Stat 509, as amended, 48 U.S.C. 1644), the Joint Resolution to provide for accepting, ratifying and confirming the cessions of certain islands of the Samoan group to the United States, and for other purposes (45 Stat. 1253; 48 U.S.C. 1661), and section 603(c) of the Covenant to Establish a Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands in Political Union With the United States of America (90 Stat. 263; 48 U.S.C. 1681) regulations relating to duties on manufactured articles, other than those issued under Section 401 of Public Law 83-768 as amended, (68 Stat. 1139 as amended, 19 U.S.C. 1202) that are consistent with the intent thereof, shall have no force or effect with respect to articles coming into the United States from the insular possessions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from Guam [Mr. WON PAT].

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WON PAT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Guam?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

UNFILLED PROMISES OF SUPPLY SIDE ECONOMICS: THE TAX CUTS ROLL ON

(Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, Ronald Reagan once declared the progressive income tax in this country to be a direct descendant of Karl Marx. As an ardent anti-Communist, then, it is not surprising that upon assuming the Presidency, Mr. Reagan sought to revise that Tax Code by shifting its burden on Government to middle-income Americans—$10,000-$40,000.

The cost of that change in policy has been awesome. Mr. Reagan's new Tax Code virtually gave away the store to Americans and corporate interests. What could have been a balanced Federal budget turned into a sea of red ink to the tune of $200 billion a year.

Today I include in the RECORD part 4 of a series of eight articles by Leland DuVall of the Arkansas Gazette (Wednesday, Sept. 12, 1984, p. 15A) entitled "Unfilled Promises of Supply Side Economics." Today's article is "The Tax Cuts Roll On."

Sadly, Mr. DuVall concludes this article with a chilling reminder "One of the weaknesses of a democracy * * * is that people sometimes do not know what is happening to them—while it is happening."

[From the Arkansas Gazette, Sept. 12, 1984]

UNFILLED PROMISES OF SUPPLY SIDE ECONOMICS: THE TAX CUTS ROLL ON

(By Leland DuVall)

Reaganism, the comprehensive economic-social-political policy under which the government has operated for almost four years, confuses the pundits who seek deep and complex explanations for puzzling policies. An outside observer, trained to analyze and report on the performance of public servants, tends to start with the premise that a consistent philosophy undergirds the initiated policies.

Those who seek to rationalize Reaganism as the manifestation of a profound philosophy encounter an enigma. An administration, dedicated to a crusade against big government and seeking to shrink the scope of the federal bureaucracy by eliminating waste, is patently undisturbed by Pentagon spending and cost over-runs on projects of uncertain value.

The pundits become even more confused by the fiscal philosophy. In the beginning, the administration sought to balance the budget by cutting taxes. Now, after three-and-one-half years that added about half-a-trillion dollars to the national debt, the administration continues to proclaim that "our program is working." The confident pronouncements from the White House, as the nation heads into the 1984 campaign, seem designed to convince the country that Mr. Reagan set out to double the national debt in two terms. And if we hold to the present course, the country almost certainly will achieve that goal.

Those who are perplexed by all this may be looking for something that was not there in the first place. Perhaps there is less than meets the eye in the highly-merchandised package that became known as Reaganism. In other words, "Shoot lower, Sheriff, He's riding a Shetland."

A significant body of evidence supports the thesis that Mr. Reagan was not motivated primarily by a desire to stimulate economic growth, wipe out unemployment and balance the budget when he embraced the concept that became known as "supply-side economics." Indeed, he probably made little attempt to understand the nuances of the theory.

The fact is that since 1954. Ronald Reagan has been on a mission to save the United States from socialism. Since he perceives the graduated income tax as the greatest threat, he was prepared to work for its elimination. If progress in the appropriate direction could be achieved in the name of supply-side economics and if the Curve introduced to the world by Economist Arthur Laffer could be displayed to dramatize the concept, he was prepared to employ the strategy.

Confirmation of this can be found in the transcripts of the speeches and radio sermons Mr. Reagan delivered more than 20 years ago. In one of these, he said.

"We have received this progressive tax direct from Karl Marx, who designed it. The originator of this system said you should use this progressive taxation to tax the middle class out of existence, because you can't have socialism where you have a strong middle class."

There is, of course, no empirical evidence that the "progressive" income tax ever hampered economic growth or inhibited the middle class. The period when the upper brackets of our income tax were highest—from the World War II to the adoption of the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981—coincided with our most impressive expansion and with the highest level of prosperity for everyone including the middle class and the wealthy. Conversely, the period since the rates were reduced by the maximum amount considered politically feasible has been characterized by the longest and one of the deepest recessions of the post-war period.

More than that, the rolling effect of indexing and the tax cuts may prove to be devastating to the economy of the nation. Even Mr. Reagan seemed to be disturbed over the size of the deficit written into his own 1985 budget. He appealed to Congress to make a "down payment" on the shortfall, but found its proposals unacceptable and produced his own "Rose Garden" solution. Having sponsored two tax increases to try to recapture a small part of the revenue given up in the 1981 tax cut, the administration finds itself with a fiscal crisis that it hopes can be camouflaged until after the election.

Beyond that, the plans are secret. The best guess, at this point, is that Mr. Reagan will embrace something akin to the Fair and Simple Tax (FAST), currently being touted by Representative Jack Kemp (Rep., N.Y.) and others.

Just as the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 was a euphemism for a massive tax reduction that placed the emphasis at the points Mr. Reagan favored, FAST is simply another name for a flat-rate tax. If he gets it, Mr. Reagan will have succeeded in wiping out the Marxist threat he perceives in the graduated income tax system.

Under the FAST concept, every citizen (presumably) would pay the same "rate" on income. The person who drew $5,000 a year would be obligated for the same percentage of the income as the one who earned $50,000 to $500,000. Well, maybe not quite the same. Those whose incomes fall into the upper brackets historically have been able to find ingenious ways to hide a little here, a little there, and more somewhere else so that the net rate probably would be lower than the percentage applied to persons with low income. FAST would quickly envolve into progressive income tax in reverse. Those who earned least would pay the highest rates.

In 1978, Mr. Reagan explained how the system worked by referring to a book written by (or ghost-written for) the late Andrew Mellon, who served as Secretary of Treasury under Presidents Harding, Coolidge and Hoover.

"History shows," Mr. Mellon wrote, "that taxes which are inherently excessive are not paid. The high tax rates inevitably put pressure upon the taxpayer to withdraw his capital from productive business and find lawful methods of avoiding the realization of taxable income."

Both Mr. Reagan and Mr. Mellon obviously were totally unfamiliar with Moreland's

Ninth Law of Human Behavior and Economics, which says: Taxes are always too high.

Those who seek loopholes work just as hard at the job when the rate is 20 per cent as when it is 50 per cent. Where the IRS is involved, all payments are deemed to be excessive. The difference is that persons with high incomes are more resourceful in finding the loopholes than those with low incomes. Since they have more at stake, the high-income taxpayer can afford to hire expert loopholers.

Mr. Reagan's long-term objective of eliminating the progressive income tax is somewhat nearer to realization than might have been expected, but the country may not be ready for FAST. Since Congressman Kemp's first idea for balancing the budget, supply-side economics, was unsuccessful, there is no reason for anyone to believe his second idea would work either.

But even if the FAST system is adopted—and, unfortunately, it seems to have generated some support—and fails to produce sufficient revenue to solve the fiscal problems, Mr. Reagan still will have achieved his long-term goal of eliminating the threat of socialism inherent in the "Marxist" graduated income tax.

There is considerable evidence to support the belief that the administration is holding still another tax plan in reserve. If the Congress won't approve the flat-rate tax, or if it does and the tax doesn't produce enough revenue to balance the budget, the new plan will be trotted out and a new campaign launched.

This reserve plan is the value added tax, a kind of a sales tax that is added to the cost of a product at every stage of its production. Some say the VAT, as it's called in Europe, is the ultimate solution because once the principle is established, the rates can be raised easily on the rationalization that the government simply must have additional revenue with which to meet its obligations and to avoid unacceptable deficits. Imagine, if a VAT were already in place, how high the rates would have to go to make up a $200 billion deficit. The difference between it an our existing federal taxes is that the burden of the VAT would fall primarily on those who spend most of their income for the simple purpose of surviving.

In 1980, a majority of the voters apparently believed they were giving Ronald Reagan a mandate to shrink the scope of government—without, it should be mentioned, tinkering with the programs favored by each individual group—and to use the savings to reduce tax obligations. Mr. Reagan obviously interpreted the victory as an authorization to rescue the country from the threat of Marxism by reducing and, ultimately, eliminating the progressive income tax.

In the early stages, Mr. Teagan's tax program is rolling inexorably in the desired direction. With the rates scaled back and collections curbed, the budget has become a disaster area, but the crisis merely sets the stage for the next turn. The deficits cn be reduced or cured with a flat-rate tax FAST) and a value added tax (VAT), neither of which would be attributed to Karl Marx. Thus will the country be saved from the threat of socialism.

The flaw in the concept, from the viewpoint of (Republican) politicians, is that it cannot simply be "sold" as a theory. In due course, it must be financed. As the burden shifts to those least able to pay, reality will replace theory. But by then it will be too late to do anything about it.

One of the weaknesses of a democracy—and all systems are imperfect—is that people sometimes do not know what is happening to them—while it is happening.

TAX COMPLIANCE

(Mr. RUSSO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RUSSO. Mr. Speaker, this administration has often sought to disguise its real purpose by the coining of a catchy phrase or an appealing slogan. Thus, in 1981, tax cuts for the rich became supply-side economics. And, over the last 3 years, as this administration scrambled to reduce the deficits its policies helped create, "revenue enhancement" became a substitute for the need to obtain a tax increase. Today, this Congress must say no as this administration encourages tax evasion in the name of deficit reduction.

I urge my colleagues to join me, and over 110 cosponsors in adopting legislation, H.R. 6315, that I am introducing today to stop this outrageous practice.

TAX COMPLIANCE AND TREASURY DEBT

The Tax Reform Act of 1984 repealed the 30-percent withholding tax on certain interest that foreign investors receive from the United States. The repeal of this tax allows foreigners to buy U.S. Treasury obligations, as well as obligations of U.S. corporations, free of any U.S. tax on the interest payments. Repeal of the tax makes it essential that the Treasury Department distinguish between real foreigners, who are eligible for tax-free interest, and Americans who pose as foreigners to evade U.S. tax.

The Treasury Department has issued temporary regulations that seek to distinguish between foreign and American purchasers of U.S. Treasury debt. In these regulations, Treasury says that the Internal Revenue Service will collect no tax on interest that it pays to a foreign financial institution that holds a Treasury obligation in registered form if the foreign financial institution certifies to the IRS that it is not holding the obligation for the benefit of an American. However, the foreign institution need not identify the beneficial owner. It need not tell the IRS how it determined that the owner is not an American.

In addition, Treasury has announced that it will issue further regulations to prohibit American entities from buying U.S. Government obligations and effectively reselling those obligations in bearer form by issuing their own bearer obligations that correspond in amount and term to the U.S. Government obligations. However, under stated Treasury policy, foreign banks—or other foreign persons—may repackage registered Treasury debt and resale that debt in bearer form.

Treasury's rules do prevent some flagrant forms of tax evasion. Nonetheless, the Treasury rules for preventing tax evasion by Americans are inadequate. In the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 [TEFRA], Congress cracked down on new issues of bearer debt. Congress imposed harsh penalties on domestic bearer debt, not only to prevent tax evasion, but also because bearer debt obligations had become the medium of exchange for the narcotics trade and for other illegal undertakings. Treasury's plans to sell debt to anonymous foreigners fly in the face of Congress' concerns in enacting the TEFRA compliance rules. Treasury's need for funds to finance the deficit should not cause it to close its eyes to the source of the funds it receives. Furthermore, Treasury should not close its eyes to the concerns of foreign countries whose citizens may hold Treasury securities anonymously to evade their home country taxes. In a world where we ask help from our foreign friends in dealing with illegal drug trafficking and the like, we cannot ignore their legitimate concerns.

The legislation that I am introducing today will require Treasury and all U.S. Government agencies to know their customers when they issue tax-exempt debt. It will codify the regulatory prohibition on the issuance of bearer debt by Treasury and other U.S. Government agencies. More significantly, it will require the identification of the ultimate beneficial owner of obligations issued by Treasury and other U.S. Government agencies, whoever the nominal registered owner may be: the legislation reimposes the 30-percent withholding tax on the interest on these obligations unless the ultimate beneficial owner gives his or her name and affirms, under penalties of perjury, that he or she is not an American. Investors will not be able to use income tax treaty exemptions to circumvent this identification requirement.

In addition, consistent with stated Treasury policy, the legislation will prevent the repackaging of U.S. Government debt as bearer debt by American entities. The legislation will accomplish this by denying an interest deduction to an American issuer of repackaged bearer debt, and by imposing on the issuer an excise tax equal to 3 percent of the debt times the term of the debt in years. The legislation also will prevent the repackaging of U.S. Government debt by foreigners, thus sealing off a potentially serious avenue of tax evasion left open by current Treasury policy. The legislation will do this by reimposing the 30-percent withholding tax on interest paid on U.S. Government obligations held by foreigners who repackage the U.S. Government debt for resale in bearer form. Like interest on U.S. Government obligations held by persons who refuse to identify themselves, interest on U.S. Government debt repackaged as foreign-issued bearer debt will be subject to the 30-percent tax without regard to any treaty exemption from the tax.

The purpose of this legislation is simple: to prevent tax cheating. This legislation will limit our reliance on foreign middlemen to enforce compliance with U.S. tax laws. It will impose safeguards on the sale of the safest investments in the world, obligations of the U.S. Government. The danger that the Treasury, to finance the burgeoning Federal deficit, would suddenly flood the world with tens of billions of dollars of anonymously held paper is too great a risk to take. Congress must take steps to ensure it does not happen. The legislation that I submit today will not only give us this assurance, but it will improve international tax compliance, and it will set a standard for other countries to follow.

HIGH HOLIDAYS 5745

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, for Jews all over the world, the new year will begin this evening, the first day in the autumn month of Tishri, 5745, under the Jewish calendar, with the celebration of Rosh Hashana, the Day of Judgment. This is a joyous, but solemn occasion for Jews, and the beginning of a 10-day period of penitence, the Days of Awe, ending on Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement, the holiest day of the year.

On Rosh Hashana, God remembers all his creatures and judges humankind. Their destinies are inscribed in the Book of Life, and it is a time for prayer, self-reflection, and penitence. The highlight of the Rosh Hashana service in the synagogue is the blowing of the Shofar, or ram's horn, whose sound is meant to awaken man's conscience, to renew his faith, to return him to God, and to summon all Jews to self-examination and repentance.

During the evening celebration in the home, festival candles are lit, and a holiday meal is served, including a round loaf of bread and apples dipped in honey to symbolize the hope for a sweet new year. It is also customary to send friends and relatives cards containing special wishes for a new year of good will, peace, and happiness.

For 10 days, beginning with Rosh Hashana and ending with Yom Kippur, all Jews make a concentrated effort at introspection and reconciliation. Jews search their souls and repent for their sins, and ask forgiveness. Their deeds and fate are then weighed in the balance by God on the last day. This final day, the 10th of Tishri, Yom Kippur, is the culmination of the entire holiday period. It is marked by fasting and all other physical abstinence, in order for Jews to concentrate to the utmost on spiritual elements. The whole day is spent in the synagogue, praying and repenting for past sins, and the day ends with the loud, long Shofar blast which marks the final sealing of the heavenly gates, the renewal of the spirit, and a final cleansing of the heart.

During these most holiest of days, as the Congressman from the 11th Congressional District of Illinois, I extend my greetings and best wishes for a happy new year to my many constituents and friends of the Jewish faith, as well as to all Jews throughout the world, especially those hundreds of thousands of Jews living under Communist oppression. Hopefully the new year, 5745, will bring with it a relaxation of restrictions and an increase in the numbers of Jews who will be allowed to emigrate to Israel so that they may worship in religious freedom. "Next year in Jerusalem."●

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION MAKING TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS TO THE LIFE INSURANCE PROVISIONS OF THE TAX REFORM ACT OF 1984

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, one of the most complex and highly technical areas of the Internal Revenue Code, subchapter L, was significantly revised in the 1984 Tax Reform Act. Part I of subchapter L, which provides a discrete set of rules for the taxation of life insurance companies, was completely overhauled. Many of the old notions of measuring income and expense for life insurance companies were discarded; those that survived reenactment in the 1984 act were carefully examined and amended where necessary. This was a major legislative effort, important in the sense that it established a wholly new approach to the taxation of a major financial services industry.

Now that the ink has begun to dry on the new law, and we have had an opportunity to step back and review the work, the need for the inevitable fine tuning is becoming apparent. That this revision of an entire subchapter might require technical adjustments is not surprising, for several reasons.

First, the rules for taxation of life insurance companies are one of the most technically difficult areas of an already highly complex body of corporate tax law. Second, the interrelationship of various provisions of newly amended tax law, within and without subchapter L, cannot always be anticipated during the legislative evolution of a tax bill as massive as the 1984 act. This is especially difficult when Congress struggles with establishing general policy principles and tax norms that are theoretically sound, but when taken as a whole may present planning opportunities, unintended windfalls and revenue shortfalls when applied to actual taxpayer activities. Third, the appropriate tax and accounting treatment of policyholder dividends and the objective of tax equity among stock-owned and mutual life insurance companies are issues no more easy of resolution today than they have been in the last 65 years. The 1984 act takes an innovative approach in this area, but it will require adjustment and periodic revision in order to correlate industry experience with the tax theory.

All of this is said by way of background to explain why today Congressmen CONABLE, STARK, and MOORE are joining me in introducing H.R. 6312, a bill to make technical clarifications to certain provisions of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984, Public Law 98-369, and to ensure that the revenues estimated from enactment of the life insurance tax provisions of that act are, within reasonable tolerance, collected. The provisions of this legislation would be effective as of the effective date of the 1984 act rules; that is, taxable years beginning after December 31, 1983.

Subsection (a) of the bill would amend new section 808 of the Internal Revenue Code—relating to the policyholder dividends deduction—to prevent companies from taking undue advantage of the fresh start that was granted in consideration of a legislative change in accounting method for policyholder dividends. Any policyholder dividend amount that is accelerated and becomes paid or accrued because of a change in business practices by a company after December 31, 1983, in declaring policyholder dividends, would not be taken into account as paid or accrued for tax purposes in the taxable year of change to the extent such amount does not exceed the company's 1984 fresh-start adjustment for policyholder dividends. Changes in business practices covered by the amendment would include ones that change either the date of accrual of policyholder dividends or the date of payment of policyholder dividends. Also, any adjustment made to the amount of policyholder dividends paid or accrued for any taxable year because of this amendment would be taken into account in applying the amendment in any subsequent taxable year.

Section (b) of the bill would remove a purported ambiguity in the language of new section 809(g)(1)(A) of the Code. The amendment would make it clear that for purposes of the section 809 reduction in mutual company policyholder dividend deductions, the terms "statement gain or loss from operations" is determined on the basis of the annual statement of the company without regard to Federal income taxes, and with the following adjustments for tax differences: by substituting for the annual statement amount for policyholder dividends the amount of deduction for dividends determined under section 808, by determining reserves for policyholder liabilities on the basis of tax rather than statutory rules, and by properly adjusting for realized capital gains and other relevant items. Section (b) of this bill is intended only as a clarification of the existing section 809(g)(1)(A) policy and is not intended to either increase or decrease the tax dividend adjustment to annual statement provisions for policyholder dividends. Accordingly, this technical amendment should not have any impact on overall revenues estimated under the 1984 act, nor affect the projected segment balance of industry taxes between stock and mutual companies.

As I noted earlier in my statement, the amendments made by the bill would take effect as if included in the original amendments to subchapter L made by section 211 of the Tax Reform Act of 1984.

The purpose of introducing these important amendments at this time is twofold. One is to provide taxpayers with notice as to the intent of the Congress to ensure that the revenue targets of the 1984 act are not eroded. The second is that there be as little ambiguity as possible with respect to technical interpretations of statutory language upon which taxpayers might rely in making 1984 yearend business decisions. Taxpayers should realize that the language of the introduced bill may be modified somewhat both to mitigate any unintended consequences of its provisions and to broaden the scope of the fresh-start manipulation rules in the case of other reserves where circumstances may warrant antiabuse provisions.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the distinguished ranking member of the committee, BARBER CONABLE, and the two principal authors of the 1984 act life insurance tax provisions, Messrs. STARK and MOORE, are cosponsoring this legislation. I have also discussed this legislation with the Treasury Department and it is my understanding that Treasury recognizes the need for these provisions and will support enactment of the legislation.●

● Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be able to join with my chairman and the distinguished ranking Republican on our committee, Mr. CONABLE in sponsoring this technical bill which seeks to assure that the revenue base of the life insurance provisions of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 are not eroded.

The provisions of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 dealing with the taxation of life insurance companies were both intricate and complex. This legislation represents a small technical change to those rules and should assure that the provisions work as intended. The chairman has ably described the workings of the legislation and I will not repeat them. I, of course, fully support this legislation and want to again thank Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI for introducing this bill.●

KENNEDY CENTER BAILOUT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MOLINARI] will be recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. MOLINARI. I thank the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to discuss an issue that has been raised from time to time on the floor, and that is the bill that we commonly refer to as the Kennedy Center bailout bill.

This bill has a rather jaded history. I can say with certainty that it will be attached to either the continuing resolution in the other body or perhaps the Interior appropriations bill.

We are not going to have an opportunity to debate the bill. So this is our only opportunity to reveal what has transpired on this particular piece of legislation.

For over 6 months this bill has been floating around in both Houses and whenever we make inquiry, as happened on the floor here earlier, nobody seems to know where the bill is. Everybody is denying parentage of this particular piece of legislation.

Indeed, today I spoke to Senator MCCLURE's office and to his committee and they were totally unaware of the proceedings that have transpired on the House side.

So I think it is important that we make a record today as to what has actually occurred. This bill was considered by the Committee on Public Works and Transportation and the Subcommittee on Public Buildings and Grounds, on April 11, 1984. There was a hearing held that day and officials from the Kennedy Center and the Treasury Department appeared to testify.

There were a number of questions raised about the bill which essentially attempts to resolve the Center's obligation to repay $20.4 million on its revenue bond indebtedness and approximately $30 million of accrued interest.

The bill would have provided for a waiver of the total accrued interest of $30 million; it would have provided for a wiaver in the future, forever, of any interest, and, would require the Kennedy Center to pay $200,000 annually into a sinking fund, which would accrue interest, to retire the $20.4 million in revenue bonds.

The question was raised by myself, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] and others as to whether Kennedy Center should not be required and if it had the financial capability to pay something more on its debt to the taxpayers.

On April 25, 1984, a meeting was held with representatives of OMB, Congressman SHAW, myself, Congressman YOUNG of Missouri, and Congressman LEVITAS. OMB refused to testify in public on the bill but did agree to meet with us in private to discuss their role in drafting the legislation and explain there position.

We returned to a markup in the Subcommittee on Public Buildings and Grounds on May 8, 1984. Dissatisfied with the original bill, we advanced the following suggestion. It was apparent that at the current parking rates and what the Kennedy Center is receiving they would not be able to pay the annual interest on that indebtedness, which comes to some $1.2 million. But nobody, nobody ever suggested that Kennedy Center was unable to make some payment on behalf of the taxpayers of this Nation.

We made an offer and the offer was very simple: What we said essentially was this. First, we would waive the $30 million in past interest. Second, we would take 50 percent of the net revenues the Kennedy Center receives from the concession parking garage, and the first $200,000 would be applied to a reduction, an immediate reduction, of the bond principal indebtedness, and whatever remained would be treated as interest for that year.

Representatives of Kennedy Center sent back a message saying, "If you can up that figure to $300,000, we will accept it."

Well, we talked some more and we settled on $250,000.

I think it is significant to mention that this proposal was passed out of the subcommittee in that form.

□ 1440

The first $250,000 would be applied to a reduction of bond principle indebtedness and the balance would be treated as interest.

Now, I am not too good at mathematics, but I think if you work with a pencil and paper you would find that the interest would work out of somewhere around 1½ or 2 percent in the initial years.

The substitute was accepted. And then the bill was in limbo. We kept waiting, wondering what was happening. Suddenly, we were advised that the bill passed in its original form in the Senate, unanimously.

Now, in checking today, I learned that the Senate committee staff on Interior appropriations was never advised by the Kennedy Center or Treasury that these negotiations took place on the House side and that this offer had indeed been accepted.

Now, there has been an argument raised that the parking garage revenues are needed by Kennedy Center as an offset to the operating losses of the Center. We could take five special orders to discuss the mismanagement practices at the Kennedy Center.

It is interesting to note that in the New York Times, on September 19, 1984, Roger L. Stevens was quoted as saying that he is pushing hard for passage of the bill before Congress goes home, arguing that the Center has become a national cultural treasure and stimulus for cultural life in the Capitol and as such deserves some of the Federal subsidy money that is going to other cultural endeavors in the country.

Mr. Stevens seems to know a lot more about the status of this bill than we do.

I am very distressed that those of us serving in the House have been denied the courtesy of the opportunity to bring this bill up under the orderly procedures of the House. If, in fact, the sponsors, whoever they may be, believe that the bill in its original form is the way to go, then certainly they should have allowed the bill to come to the floor and let us debate it.

When Mr. Kendrick was told about my feelings, and he is the Center's Director of Operations, he said my statements were made because we were in the middle of a campaign and it is campaign season. That is the courtesy that we got after 6 weeks of intense negotiations with them and their representatives.

Now, there is no question that there is a lot of support for the original bill. I am told that there is a lot of support high up. I do not know what that means. I do not want to demean any Member of this House or anybody in particular.

What I am suggesting is that we have an opportunity to find out why it is that the Kennedy Center has not accepted our offer, why they changed their mind, why they did not have the courtesty to tell the Senate that they had negotiations with this body and, in fact, had acepted a compromise offer.

Yes, I was told by one of my colleagues that it will be moved before the end of next week. I was told that it would be greased and come through here so fast that we will not even know that it happened. I suspect that that might be the case, even though we have been watching every day for the past month and a half, alerting the members of the duty desk to block any unanimous-consent statement or an effort to bring up this piece of legislation while those of us who had some questions about it might be out of the room.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOLINARI. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SHAW. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

We were talking about the management of the Kennedy Center and how it is set up. I think it is interesting to take a close look at some of the productions to see how the Kennedy Center has actually fared in this particular area.

I think it is most important that when we are talking about deficits at the Center and the problems that a theater is having that you have to go in and look at each particular production.

Now, what I am quoting from is the financial statement of the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts for the 12 months ended October 2, 1983. I would like to share with you just for a moment some of the losses that it is experiencing. These are the plays that are produced by production companies presumably to make a profit.

We find that for the play "Monday After the Miracle," the Kennedy Center share of receipts was $856,000; the Kennedy Center share of expenses was over $1 million.

Let us take another one. The play, "Outrage," and what is happening at the Center is an outrage, the Kennedy Center took in as its share of receipts, $154,000, but its share of expenses was $569,000. Over half a million dollars.

The play, "Make and Break," Kennedy Center share of receipts, $733,000. Kennedy Center share of expenses, $882,000. They have probably come about as close to breaking even on that one as any of them and yet, it lost $149,000.

Now, the next one, "You Can't Take It With You," was an exception. The Kennedy share of those receipts was $711,000 and their share of expenses was only $694,000, which did yield a profit, and it was the only one on the list that I have that did, of $17,500.

But you go on to the next one, the play, "Room Service," $699,000; the expenses were $916,000 for a deficit to the Kennedy Center of almost a quarter of $1 million. Now, that is absolutely no way to run a theater. To make it even more disturbing, we find in looking at the situation, well, who is making these bookings. We find it is Kennedy Center Productions, Inc., who is by far the biggest user of the theater. And who is Kennedy Center Productions, Inc.? This is the private corporation which I understand is controlled by Mr. Stevens, who is also supposed to be running the Kennedy Center and has been the spokesman and the man who has been coming into this Congress and asking for this bailout. It is absolutely an outrage if I have ever seen one.

I think that it is absolutely essential that we shine the light of day on this whole matter.

Now, the gentleman from New York just said that we learned from some of our colleagues on the Democratic side that this particular bill is going to come in and it is going to come in so fast that we will never see it come in and never see it going and it might be a day or two before we find out what happened.

Well, I would say in looking at the figures and looking at the financial statement, looking at the makeup of the Kennedy Center, and considering some of the problems that we have heard about concerning the current management of the Kennedy Center that those who would want us to pass the bailout bill would not want us to take a close look at it. Why? Because it appears that what we are looking at is an absolute outrage from top to bottom.

When you talk about the franchise, you are talking about the parking and the contracts that have been made for that. In reviewing the contracts we find that the Kennedy Center has paid out millions of dollars in interest to the operator of the parking garage from whom $3 million was borrowed and has also paid interest of almost a half a million dollars on its indebtedness to a private financial institution. But then when we stop and say what has been repaid to Uncle Sam, what has the Kennedy Center repaid on the original $20 million loan and its debt which has now grown to $50 million. We find out the Kennedy Center has paid absolutely nothing.

To make it worse, now after all these years they are coming back and saying, "Forgive and forget." Forgive the $30 million in interest and "Let us pay off the $20 million obligation," the original bond principal, with just a little over $6 million.

This is wrong. It is wrong for the Federal Government. It certainly would be beneath, I think, the dignity of this body to consider this matter without full and open debate.

It is about time we brought some sunshine into the Federal Government. It is missing. We do not have it and I think what we are looking at here is absolutely an outrage and perhaps one of the ugliest examples of how this body operates in its closing days.

Mr. MOLINARI. I could not agree with the gentleman more.

There was an article this week in Variety magazine saying, "Master Class folds. Bad luck continues. Bad luck continues for Kennedy Center."

□ 1450

They go on in this article to say that this drama Master Class is the latest in a string of disappointments for the Kennedy Center within the past year.

Nobody has thought about looking at the management of the Kennedy Center. You know, when you talk about the Kennedy Center, it is like talking about the Statue of Liberty or talking about the American flag. It is a living memorial to a beloved President, and it is heresy for us to get up and question.

But let us go back a bit in history. Congress was repeatedly told that the Center would not cost the taxpayers a penny and the Center could be managed so that it could continually operate in the black. However, $23 million was appropriated to construct the building, taxpayers' dollars; $4.7 million was appropriated to fix the roof; $20.4 million was loaned for the parking garage; $39.5 million has been appropriated for operation and maintenance costs.

With regard to operation and maintenance costs, this exchange took place between former Representative Cramer and the Center's chairman, the same chairman, Roger Stevens, in the House Public Works Committee hearing, December 12, 1963:

Representative CRAMER. Will this legislation obligate the Government in any way for maintenance and operation in the future?

Mr. STEVENS. No, sir. We feel that in their income from rentals we will have enough money for proper maintenance and even going so far as depreciation of equipment.

Now, the gentleman from Florida has pointed out that APCOA, the concessionaire, loaned to the Center $3 million. And it is interesting to note that the Kennedy Center was able to pay, in interest alone $2,648,200, not to the Federal Government but to the concessionaire. That is a $3 million loan. American Security Bank loaned the Kennedy Center $2 million. Right now, this year, they will pay to a bank $697,000, $500,000 on account of principal and $197,000 in interest.

They are paying interest to private sources. But not a cent to the taxpayer.

Now, let us look at one other aspect that I think is very important. We are talking about a parking garage that charges $3 to park. We suggested that they consider raising it by $1 to the staggering sum of $4. The Kennedy officials shuddered with horror at that thought, and they said that we would cause a substantial decline in attendance—patrons who pay as much as $55 a ticket. Where in this country can you go to a theater and park your car for $3?

We had figures from the General Accounting Office that if they charged $4 they would net out something like $1.6 million as their share. How can we justify with any commonsense whatsoever to the taxpayers that we are going to waive in the future accrued interest regardless of what the financial position of that Center might be 5 years from now or 10 years from now? These bonds are not due until the year 2017 and 2018. And yet, here we are, taking this extraordinary step of waiving all future interest, no ifs, ands, and buts.

Forget about the $30 million that is owed to the taxpayers. That is gone. We agreed to that. We tried to come up with a compromise that we felt was minimal. It was not a good compromise from the taxpayers' standpoint, but it was better than nothing. It was better than nothing. And we walked out of the room saying, "Well, we didn't get what we believed we should have, but we got something, we got something, as modest as it may have been."

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. MOLINARI. Yes; I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SHAW. I think this is a very important fact that has been misunderstood by many people. These people came to us a long time ago. I am ranking member on the Public Buildings and Grounds Subcommittee, which has jurisdiction over this particular matter, and we tried to work with them. We met with them and we met with members from the Treasury and tried to figure out what the cash needs were of the Kennedy Center.

No one speaking here today and no one I know is really against the Kennedy Center or its objectives and some of the fine things it does for the Washington community and certainly for the entire Nation. So this is not a question of this at all. It is a question of sitting down and trying to work their problem out.

I happen to have a little bit of a background in working with financial statements, being both a CPA and a lawyer. So I looked at the statements, I looked at their revenue, I looked at their franchises. And taking from that, I tired to prepare an answer to their problems. One of the things that popped up almost immediately was the revenue that they have received from the parking garage. We show—and these are figures that they have given to us themselves—that in 1984 the estimated revenue from the parking garage is $237,000. This is the income and this is the money that the Kennedy Center will make off the parking garage this year. This income will increase to an estimated $877,000 in 1988.

Now, this is assuming that the parking price stays exactly the same. So there is going to be a situation where the parking revenue of the Kennedy Center is going to increase threefold from $237,000 to $877,000.

The compromise that Mr. MOLINARI is referring to was one that was going to take effect at that particular point in time so that the added revenue to the Kennedy Center would be what was going to go to the Federal Government to pay off the indebtedness.

What in the world could be fairer? We came up with a solution that would in no way affect the cash flow going into the Kennedy Center. And even after we went all that way in trying to work out the problems with them, they chose this back door approach, which I think is despicable.

Mr. MOLINARI. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I think that if we consider a fair approach to this—and I think that the point should be made that we are not here to close down the Kennedy Center—we would like to see it run more efficiently, more profitably, and I think it can be. We are not trying to do anything to cut back on the program of Kennedy Center. But the gentleman from Florida has pointed out this sharp increase in revenues that has occurred, and in 1987 the projections are that it will be, at the present level, $3 a parking ticket, over $800,000. And you know what that means? It means that if they paid 50 percent of that $800,000 to the Treasury under the compromise plan, they would pay $400,000, an amount less than what they are paying today to banks.

So we questioned those who say they do not have the ability to pay it. And, for heaven's sake, the preposterous response, when we suggested, "If you have a financial problem, why not consider a modest increase in your parking revenues?" The response that we got was, "Hey, the patrons at Kennedy Center feel that they should have parking for nothing." That is the answer that we received.

Mr. Speaker, as I said initially, I am very distressed at the background of this bill. For 6 months we have been tracking it. We spent 2 solid months in good-faith negotiations with Treasury, with the trustees of Kennedy Center, with OMB, with our colleagues. We fashioned an agreement that was more than fair. The Kennedy Center trustees were not satisfied. I am terribly disappointed in them. I think they have done a disservice to Congress and to the people of this country.

For my own part, I would like to see the whole lock, stock, and barrel leave and have some competent individuals take over, people who would be reasonable and rational, and who would not have snubbed the House as they did in this particular case. They have not had the courtesy to advise the Senate of the negotiations and the agreement that had been reached.

I hoped that we would have the opportunity to debate this on the floor so that our colleagues can share in the knowledge of what transpired for 2 solid months, but it does not appear that we will. For that reason, we have chosen to take the course today of bringing out the facts as we know them on a special order.

At this point I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SHAW. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I have very little left to say. I believe we have covered the situation thoroughly. If there are any Members who would like to join in this special order to take the other side of this issue, we would be delighted to share our time with them because it appears, at least at this particular early date, unless there is some change in plans, that this will be the opportunity, the only opportunity that we will have to fairly and openly debate this entire issue.

□ 1500

In reviewing the situation and what we are talking about, we are talking about the Center's bond indebtedness. A contractual indebtedness to the U.S. Government which simply states, and I quote right from the bond itself:

That the funds shall be payable as to both principle and interest from the revenues of the said John F. Kennedy Center from parking fees therein.

I already advised the House as to the parking fees and the projections. I would like to correct the RECORD at one particular point. The projections that I was quoting from was prepared by the General Accounting Office serving this Congress.

I consider that the funds received from this parking garage are a sacred trust of the Kennedy Center as an obligation to the United States: That they are in effect our agent, collecting that money to pay back the indebtedness. What have they done? They have absolutely thrown off their contractual obligations and paid absolutely no attention to the term of the contract, and they certainly paid no attention to the U.S. Government, and have not paid their obligation off.

I understand that the meetings of the trustees are closed; they are not open to the public. We have asked for additional financial information. I have written to Mr. Stevens inquiring about such things as how many people are employed at the Kennedy Center. I want to know more about their cash flow. I want to know more about their financial statement. This was a recent letter that was sent to Mr. Stevens, and he has not had an opportunity to gather the information that I have requested, but hopefully it will be forthcoming, and we can look in depth into exactly what is going on in the Kennedy Center.

There is something wrong over there. When you find that there are theaters in town that are making money, that are running a profit and showing very fine plays, and that they do not remain dark, then you have to say what is wrong with the Kennedy Center? It is one of the finest theaters in the entire world. It should be booked up with profitable plays; it should be turning a profit. They have an obligation to the U.S. community as a whole to supply it with various cultural activities. I understand that, but I think they also have an obligation to the Federal Government to pay their debt and to run efficiently and effectively.

I quite frankly have very serious reservations about this real or, certainly, appearance of conflict of interest when we find that the same man who has owned and operated the production company, who is the tenant of the Kennedy Center, also is in the position of being the landlord of the Kennedy Center.

Now, there is nobody that can hear my voice that cannot understand that real, very real, or apparent conflict of interest that exists there. Particularly when you find that the productions, the plays that are going into the Kennedy Center are costing the Kennedy Center money. Then we find such things as the theater is dark for weeks at a time.

This is wrong; this is a waste of a real treasure of this country. I think that we have found a situation where those who have come to us years ago and said it is not going to cost this Government anything are now coming back and trying to work a backroom deal to undo their contractual obligation so that they would not have to fulfill their financial obligations to the United States.

I would ask all the Members to watch carefully next week when this House again convenes for business. There are going to be many bills coming through here, and we have reason to believe that this bailout or this conspiracy will be attached to one of the bills. I would ask all the Members to watch carefully and advise us or certainly make a timely objection, or at least let the Members know what they are voting on should this be attached to something which would be totally coming out of left field and something that we would not be able to catch in time.

We all know, who have served in this House at all, that some of the worst things that this House does, some of the worst items or bills that have gone through, such as pay raises for Members, that go through unnoticed, happen in the closing days of a session of the Congress.

As the 98th Congress draws to an end, I would hope that this would not happen again, at least as to this particular bill. Those whose fingerprints are on this will be made known. I kid you not; if this thing goes through, as I think it may very well get through without our being advised or being able to file a timely objection, this will not silence our voices. We will continue to make this whole thing open and exposed to the American people as well as to our other colleagues.

What the gentleman from New York and I are asking for is the cooperation of the House in serving as watchdogs to see that this bailout, this conspiracy does not happen. It is certainly beneath the dignity of this House, and I might say, beneath the dignity of the Kennedy Center and the President after whom it is named.

Mr. MOLINARI. I would like to ask the gentleman from Florida, because I know he has done some inquiry into the area, whether it is a fact that the meetings of the board of directors of the Center are closed meetings?

Mr. SHAW. That is the board of directors or the board of trustees and I understand that it is closed. It is not open to the public.

Mr. MOLINARI. It has been that way for some time.

Mr. SHAW. From my understanding it has always been that way.

Mr. MOLINARI. I think that reflects upon the entire problem, the fact that you cannot even have access to know what is going on at the board meetings. It is typical of the problem that we are facing here.

I hope that our voices are being heard by somebody out there who has concern, and that we can move ahead with the compromise that we have offered Kennedy Center, which I think is overly generous.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

A BACKROOM PARTY VERSUS A GRASSROOTS PARTY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, today's special order is on the topic of a backroom party versus a grassroots party. I think that yesterday, September 25, will go down as one of the most remarkable days in recent American governmental and political history. I think it illustrates fully the difference between a back roomparty and a grassroots party.

For the last year or longer, a number of us have been arguing that there is an America people's agenda. The constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget; an omnibus bill to protect us from crime and drugs; a free enterprise zone process to allow people to create jobs in poor areas; welfare reform; voluntary school prayer; a number of issues represent the agenda of the American people. Every poll we could find said that the American people wanted these issues dealt with; that they were concerned with these problems.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding, because I think we want to clarify where we came up with that agenda; that it was not just a creation that a few of us sat down and decided to come up with a few issues and then call it the American people's agenda.

The gentleman is absolutely correct. Where that agenda came from was out of a mass of polling data which is available from across the country which indicated that there were issues where large numbers of Americans were in fact in favor of certain kinds of things being done by Congress. Where there were issues that 70, 75, 80, 85 percent of the American people were in favor of moving in a particular direction where either the Congress was moving in the opposite direction or was not moving at all, and that that was the substance of the American people's agenda that we came forth with.

It was not our creation; it was a creation based upon the will of the American people as expressed over, and over and over again in a whole variety of polls that had taken place over the last 5 to 6 years. I think it is important to clarify that that we are not simply standing on the floor talking about things that we want to see done, we really are talking about things that the American people have indicated time and time again that they want to see done.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania is exactly right in that we really try to be responsive to working Americans and to the American people. We tried to use polling data. We tried to go back out and talk with people. We tried to talk with people who we felt were representative. We went back to our own districts and to other districts.

Interestingly enough as the American people have developed their agenda, a new rationale has developed on the part of liberal Democrats to avoid that agenda.

There is a new book out by one liberal Democrat in which he talks about how terrible it is to allow yourself to be directed by public opinion polling and how the best thing that could happen to a free society would be to get rid of those public opinion polls and it is a fascinating contrast that now you have Republicans and Conservatives who are responding to the American people, who are responding to the concern about crime and drugs and the concern about a balanced budget to the desire for welfare reform, to the interest in enterprise zones and it is increasingly the liberal Democrats who are saying, Oh, you should not pay any attention to the American people, and I could find that citation if any one of our Democratic friends would like to challenge it, because there is a liberal Democrat currently running for the U.S. Senate in Illinois who has in fact written a book in which he contends that it is bad to look at the American people.

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GINGRICH. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I think that it is understandable that that is a total rejection of the way in which Congress was meant to operate because the Forefathers in particular said that the House of Representatives was to be very conscious of what the American people were saying and that is the reason why they set it up with 2-year terms and all of that.

That we were supposed to be the place in which the American people's opinions came in. In fact, if you take a look at the Senate, the Senate probably should weigh longer term issues and should not at least respond to momentary polls, but the House of Representatives is supposed to be where the American people's opinion prevails, and to suggest that we somehow should ignore what the public is saying, what large numbers of people are telling us is in their best interest is to really ignore the representative process and I thank the gentleman again for yielding.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is exactly right and the point we tried to drive home, of course, is that we are very committed to trying to get votes on issues that matter to the American people.

We are very committed to trying to develop an understanding among the American people of what in Washington stops them from getting their way. And what we have discovered over the past year is that there is a real difference in Washington between the backroom political party which is now the liberal Democrats, and the grassroots party which is increasingly the Republicans.

And what we have discovered is that as the liberal Democrats have gotten more and more out of touch with the American people they have resorted to killing legislation in the backroom.

We began talking, for example, over 1 year ago about how important it was that we pass the omnibus crime bill that would work to help us stop crime and help us stop drug dealing. How important it was to our children and grandchildren to protect them from cocaine dealers and from the problems of a crime-ridden country.

And what we discovered rather quickly was that the liberal Democratic leadership of this House did not want to bring up the omnibus crime bill. That while it had passed 91 to 1 in the Senate, the liberal Democratic leadership here was committed to burying it in the Judiciary Committee and using the tricks of the game, using the procedures, the calendar, the techniques that are available to the leadership on the Democratic side to stop that bill from ever coming to the floor.

What we discovered was that in fact although the American people now say that crime is their No. 1 concern that the backroom party, the liberal Democrats, were not listening.

When I talk about the liberal Democratic leadership it is important to recognize that virtually every subcommittee and committee chairman, virtually every Member of the Democratic whip system, is a part of holding up that leadership.

If they did not vote for the current Speaker to be Speaker, he would not be. If they did not vote for the current structure of committees which are inherently unfair; if they did not vote for the current staffing system, which is unfair, none of those things would be happening.

So we fought for a year to try to bring a bill to the floor on crime and drugs that we think the American people really care about. We fought because we know the American people wanted it brought to the floor and we thought a grassroots party had a commitment to bringing that bill to the floor.

A number of people around the country began helping us. Newspapers began writing editorials. Candidates began to emerge. People who were frustrated. I just talked with one; Mike Kavouklis, who is a candidate in Tampa, FL, who founded a group called FOCUS 84. That stands for Focus On Crime in the United States.

Mike came up here last week and held a press conference and said it was terrible, terrible that the crime bill has not been alotted a committee. That the liberal Democrats were squeezing it to death. That they were smothering it. That they sent it to the Committee on the Judiciary, which had been called in Congressional Quarterly, the graveyard of legislation.

Mike went back home campaigning against a Democrat who is part of the liberal Democratic leadership.

Yesterday, we had I think a perfect example of exactly how the American people are thwarted by the liberal Democratic leadership. Yesterday morning the minority whip, Republican from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT] got up and said that he wanted to bring up the crime bill. That in order to bring up the crime bill, we had to defeat the previous question; a technical procedure which every Member of the House understood.

It was a simple, straightforward vote. If you are for bringing up the crime bill, you have to vote no on the previous question. If you are against bringing up the crime bill, you have to vote yes. It is a very simple procedure every Member understood.

I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding, because I think we want to emphasize that in fact Members did understand what they were voting on. Not only did we use the time in debate to tell them what they were voting for, but in fact, the liberal Democratic leadership sent people to the floor urging them not to vote against the previous question, in order to make the crime bill in order so that their side understood it and plus, just so people understood how far we went on this, there was actually printed material available on the floor that was being handed around the floor during that period of time which told Members precisely what it was they were voting on and why they were voting that way.

So that the idea that somebody did not understand that this procedural vote dealt with the crime bill has to be a total fallacy. The Members knew precisely why they were voting on that particular measure in the way they were at that time.

Mr. GINGRICH. So as the gentleman I think will bear witness. At the key moment, at 12:58 yesterday when we attempted to bring up the crime bill, we were defeated and only 25 Democrats voted with us.

The rest voted with the liberal Democratic leadership to kill the crime bill and they knew that was the probable effect of doing that.

The afternoon went on. We managed to get out the message across the country that liberal Democrats had voted to kill the crime bill. In fact, I just talked with Mike Kavouklis. He issued a press release yesterday afternoon. He said this is terrible. How can you vote to kill the crime bill?

At 6:17 last night, led by the Republican leader [BOB MICHEL] who has insisted that we not let the liberal Democrats slide off the hook but that we come back with a straight, substantive vote head up so that they could not hide, the gentleman from California [DAN LUNGREN] got up and moved to put the crime bill in a continuing resolution. A straightforward motion where now all of a sudden they could not hide behind procedure. They could not explain away their vote. It was obvious how they were voting.

In addition, as I say people like Mike Kavouklis were out there and had done their job. They had gotten the word out that it was wrong to vote against the crime bill and they were working to alert the American public and the grassroots network to get involved.

Suddenly at 6:17 yesterday, the liberal Democrats who had been hiding, who had been able to shield themselves from the procedure, were faced with the problem of voting a way that everyone back home would understand. And at that moment we tripled the number of Democrats who voted with us and we passed, for the moment, the crime bill by adding it to the continuing resolution.

Now, there are two lessons, I think, for the American people. The first is that there are an alarming number of Democrats who every time they can hide are going to vote with the liberal Democratic leadership to kill the American people's agenda. Every time they have a procedural screen, every time they have a way of getting behind some kind of procedural vote they are going to vote with the liberal Democrats to avoid bringing up the American people's agenda.

The second message is to watch what happens now to the crime bill because while it has been added to the conference report or to the continuing resolution, I am not sure that it is going to survive because the liberal Democratic leadership will attempt to kill it in conference.

We already saw earlier this year on enterprise zones that when enterprise zones passed the Senate and was passed by Republicans and came to conference, it was the liberal Democrats in the conference who insisted on killing enterprise zones, on killing jobs in poor areas, on killing a chance to build new factories in poor areas.

So now we have the drama this weekend. Will the liberal Democratic leadership, having failed to kill the crime bill on the floor, now kill it in conference, and will the Members who, when they were exposed to the full view of the public had to vote for the crime bill, are they now going to passively sit to one side and allow their leadership to kill the crime bill? Because if the crime bill is killed this weekend in conference, then those Democrats who switched their votes yesterday and thought they were off the hook have a whole new question to answer because they are part of the leadership team which first tried to smother the crime bill and now is going to try to drown it, that does not want to let it live, does not want to let it pass and become law.

I think there is a basic lesson here for every American. What happens in this body is very simple. Every district in America elects a Representative. When that Representative arrives in Washington, he has to decide what team he is on. A lot Representatives, in effect, join a team, a liberal team, which does not share the views, the concerns, the dreams of people back home. That liberal team, for example, in San Francisco heard its candidate, Walter Mondale, promise a massive tax increase. That liberal team next week is going to try another procedural gimmick. They are going to bring up a so-called balanced budget proposal which is the liberal excuse this year for not balancing the budget. They are going to try to hide behind that balanced budget proposal which will have no meaning and be basically a political document.

The question for the American people has to be, and we just found out again this afternoon asking the majority leader, who said, oh, they were not going to bring up the constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget; they were not going to get involved in anything that was real. They were just going to bring up what essentially is a liberal fig leaf to hide behind.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, the gentleman is correct, because what we have coming before us next week in the guise of a balanced budget vote is a gimmick, and it is a gimmick which does not even have any substance to it because I have now reviewed the substance of the bill they propose to bring before us and it turns out that it is remarkably similar to what is now the law of the land.

There is presently a law on the books which requires the Committee on the Budget here to report a balanced budget unless they deem it inappropriate to do so. Well, that is precisely what the bill talks about that we have here. We are obeying the law now, so what we are going to do is have another new law come out here just before the election, and once again a new set of words, drafted somewhere in a back room, in a way that is supposed to fool the American people that indeed we had a vote on a balanced budget.

That kind of thing is a travesty. It is condoned only by people who will condone politicians trying to obfuscate what is really taking place.

The only substantive vote we could have around here would be to do something on a constitutional amendment, because it is obvious that we cannot do something simply by changing the rules of the House, or we cannot do something by changing the law of the land. We have a law on the books right now that requires a balanced budget. That is the law of the land at the present time. We just do not obey the law.

We have got to go the route that State legislatures have found is necessary for discipline, and that is an amendment to the Constitution. Anything less than that is simply a gimmick, is simply an election year hoax, and with the kind of sly smile that we got earlier in the day from the majority leader, it is apparent that they recognize that to bring this to the floor is nothing but a hoax.

Mr. GINGRICH. I have to comment on that. To go back in history, the term "bunk" comes from this body. Many years ago, in the 19th century, a gentleman from North Carolina was making a speech and another gentleman began to get sort of irritated by the speech and began to grumble. He got nudged by the fellow sitting next to him, who said, "Do not pay any attention to that. That is just for the folks back in Buncombe County." That is where the word "bunk" originally came from. It is the idea that you would say things that had no meaning but that were designed to kid the people back home.

What we are going to see next week is sort of Oklahoma bunk. The fact is that it does not have any real meaning, it is not going to change anything, but it is designed to allow Liberals to hide from their failure.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman will yield further, maybe we ought to name it the "3-B Bill," balanced budget bunk.

Mr. GINGRICH. I think that is right. The "3-B Bill" is a great line, balanced budget bunk. What we were asking the majority leader was, could we have a chance to bring up a serious constitutional amendment that would allow for, that would require the Congress to balance the budget.

Of course, we cannot bring that up because that is real. That might pass. The Congress might have to actually balance the budget. So I think the American people have to look at yesterday's performance in which they saw a great number of Democrats who, in effect, voted one way in the morning, switched their votes 5 hours and 19 minutes later, some of whom I have to say I am absolutely amazed by.

There were 16 Members who voted against bringing up the crime bill in the morning, voted against the crime bill in the afternoon, and then, when they saw that the crime bill was going to pass, came down front after the machine had closed and changed their votes. I am not sure what those Members intend to do when they go back home, but part of the purpose of this special order and of some things we are going to do next week is to say that the American public is not dumb. We cannot bottle something up for a year, try to kill it in the morning, try to kill it in the afternoon, switch after it has already passed, and expect them to think we are for it. We ought to just 'fess up and admit we really tried to kill it and we thought we would just try to get away with a little two-step here and see if we could not get folks to believe we really were for it all along.

I think this is very, very important for the American people to understand because I sense a great deal of frustration back home. People say, "Why can you not clean up the mess in Congress? Why can you not straighten things out in Washington? Why can you not get the budget under control? Why can we not stop all the cocaine dealers?"

I think the lesson of the last 24 hours ought to be very clear to people. There is an organized, systematic, liberal Democratic leadership that runs this House. They did everything they could for a year to kill the crime bill. They had their last and successful effort to kill it at 12:58, and they killed it. Because BOB MICHEL was tenacious and because DAN LUNGREN was willing to fight, we brought it back up last night and all of a sudden, because it was a straight, clean shot where they could not hide, over 60 Democrats switched. Sixteen of them switched after the bill had passed.

I think the lesson the American people have to take is that there is a backroom political party that serves Washington lobbying interests that, in fact, is going to do everything it can to kill the things people want. There is a grassroots party that is trying to change this place, and you could tell yesterday that when they could hide, there were a number of people who were going to kill everything people want, and when we got them out in the open where they were frightened, they voted with us.

One of the questions the American people have to ask is: Do we really want a Congressman we have to scare in order to get him to vote right?

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GINGRICH. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman saying that that crime package is the same package that we asked the Democratic leadership of the House permission to bring up time and again, I think many times, at least dozens of times in the past session? Is that the same package?

Mr. GINGRICH. The gentleman is exactly correct.

Mr. HUNTER. And that is the same package that was met with silence. As I recall, we got absolutely no response.

Mr. GINGRICH. As I remember, did we not ask—and the gentleman may have the exact number—but was it not 56 days that we asked unanimous consent to bring up a variety of bills, one of which was the omnibus crime bill, 56 working days?

Mr. HUNTER. I think we asked unanimous consent on 56 working days to bring up a good part of the American agenda. I think the crime bill was not part of that agenda until the later part of the spring. So I do not know if it was 56 times, but I can remember personally standing up a number of times and asking the leadership.

Mr. GINGRICH. If I might ask of my friend, the gentleman from California, what reaction did the gentleman get from the liberal Democrats when he asked them to let him bring up the crime bill?

Mr. HUNTER. My question was, I would say, "We have the permission of BOB MICHEL, the leader on the Republican side of the aisle, to bring up this issue, the President's crime control package, and I will now yield to a spokesman for the Democratic leadership to give us permission," and I would be met with silence. Nobody would say "yes"; nobody would say "no." But this is exactly the same bill that, when it is forced on the House for a vote, passes overwhelmingly. It makes one wonder how many Members on that side of the aisle ever went to their leadership and said, "You know, that crime bill is important for the safety of the American people. How about bringing it up, Mr. Leader? How about bringing it up, Mr. Majority Whip?"

I wonder if they ever had a meeting with their leadership and said, "We would like to see that bill passed"?

□ 1530

Mr. GINGRICH. Well, let me ask the gentleman, because he certainly knows how our side works, if 100 or 125 Democrats had gone to their leader on their side and said, "We insist you bring it up." Does the gentleman not think they would have brought it up?

Mr. HUNTER. Well, absolutely, surely. They could have circulated a petition. They could have gotten together in their conference.

Mr. GINGRICH. So what was happening, in other words, was lipservice back home and quiet in Washington.

Mr. HUNTER. Until we had these two votes when we had a number of Members vote one way in the morning and the other way in the afternoon.

Mr. GINGRICH. And what was the gentleman's reaction as a gentleman who has studied the Congress, what was the gentleman's reaction? Was the gentleman surprised last night to see a sudden shift of that many votes?

Mr. HUNTER. I think I would say as a person who has been here for a couple years and seen that we are about 6 weeks away from an election, I think it was entirely predictable, but I think it was tragic in a way and it was tragic because as the gentleman says, it was essentially a statement to the people of this Nation that they have to scare their Representatives, or a number of them have to scare their Representatives to get them to be responsible and I think that is a tragic situation.

Mr. GINGRICH. I want to say something further about that, because I think it is a very important thing to think about here.

I have the greatest respect for our friends who are honestly liberals of integrity, who let us say did not agree with that bill. They said all along that they did not agree with it. They went back home and said they were against it. They voted against it in the morning. They voted against it in the afternoon and there were well over 100 of them. I have absolute respect for a Member who has beliefs, fights for those beliefs and does what he says.

I have equal respect for conservative Democrats and for conservative Republicans who said all along, "I'm in favor of that bill," but I am genuinely bothered by Members of the House who for 1½ years did nothing while we fought to bring the bill up, who claim that while they are sort of for the bill and said things back home and said, "Oh, yes, we are really for the bill, but it is all complicated," who at 12:58 would vote to kill the bill and then would reverse themselves and at 5:19 would show up voting for the bill, some of whom, as I said, 16 of whom voted for the bill after the machine closed, because it makes me wonder. Now, I have had to change my vote occasionally. I maybe walked in and voted wrong or I have have been in a situation where I did not understand what was going on. I could understand two or three or four Members who just happened to have made a mistake. That happens on occasion. They change their votes to be recorded accurately, but when you look at people who you know that morning were voting to kill the bill and you watch them wait until the last second, it makes you wonder.

I guess one of the great virtues of having C-SPAN and having a chance to address the whole Nation is that we are now in a position to say to the country, "Look at what happened. Look at the difference in a period of 5 hours."

I think that the purpose of what we are going to be doing today and on Friday and next week is to drive home the message to the American people that if you have a Congressman you have to scare, you ought to ask if that is really who you want to keep in office. Do you really want someone that you can only count on, as the gentleman from California said, 6 weeks before an election.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GINGRICH. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. Just one last statement. I think what happened yesterday when we made this switch was a great reason to not change congressional terms from 2 years to 4 years, because at least during this hunting season, so to speak, when you are 6 weeks before an election, we are going to have some people who are responsive to their constituents, to the American people. It is unfortunate that we have to wait after being in session for several years, we have to wait until we are about 30 or 40 or 50 days out before we can get something of substance accomplished.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. GINGRICH. Let me just say further that I think in this last week, you know, the gentleman's comment about 4 years versus 2 years, if you think about it, what the gentleman said was that for about 1 of 104 weeks, for about 100 weeks out of the year, out of the 2-year cycle, there are people here who basically belong to the liberal Democratic leadership and they help smother bills and they help hide them and they help stack the committees and they do all the things to make sure the liberals win. Then suddenly for about 4 weeks, at the very end of the very end of the session when they know they have got to go home and explain how they behaved, they change dramatically and they hope that the American people's memory will be short enough that they vote on the 4 weeks, not the 2 years.

I thought yesterday was such a dramatic example of the difference between 12:58 and 6:17 that we simply had to focus on.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield

Mr. GINGRICH. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I have been watching as I could from my office this special order. I had another meeting going on so I may cover a little bit of ground that these folks have covered this afternoon, but I truly think the gentleman is absolutely right in placing the votes that took place on the crime bill in the context in which the gentleman has placed them this afternoon, because as the gentleman has pointed out, we have been talking all year long about the manner in which the Democratic leadership of the House utilizes its power in the House of Representatives, not merely to obstruct the people's agenda, which they do, but then to cover up, if you will, or prevent their own membership from being held accountable by their constituents on the issues that we have talked about, things like voluntary school prayer, the balanced budget constitutional amendment, the line item veto, enterprise zones, and you go on and on.

One of those issues also includes the crime bill.

We have been saying all year long that this is really a fundamental abuse of the rules, abuse of the power of the Speaker, abuse of the power of the majority to prevent all these items from coming to the floor for a vote, and yet denying the constituents of Members of this body the opportunity to judge their Members on a vote.

The one place where we have managed to break that pattern of behavior is on that crime vote the other day; so we have one single example, one pattern of behavior that we can take out of the record and look at it and analyze it and we can show the American people how this place operates. We can show them the abuse of the rules of the House. We can show them people striving to avoid accountability for their own actions.

I just want to say that we should not permit this Congress to adjourn without discussing that specific bill very explicitly, without discussing those specific votes very explicitly.

I am glad we are talking about it here today, but it is my intention also to take out a special order next week, in all likelihood on Tuesday, in which we will discuss exactly those votes, exactly that pattern of behavior and those Members, in our judgment, that typify this pattern that both prevents action on the people's agenda and prevents Members from being held accountable by their constituents.

My staff is now preparing a letter which will be signed by several Members that we hope to distribute to Members' offices on Friday, Members who did vote in this manner, announcing to them that we will indeed be taking out a special order on Tuesday and that we will frankly be discussing their votes on this legislation and that if they feel that they could be treated unjustly in this special order, we invite them to come to the floor and discuss this issue with us, because we think it is central. We do not think that we have snuck up on anybody by this discussion. We have been talking about this abuse of power over the last 18 months in this Congress. This is going to be our only opportunity to hold this pattern of behavior up to the light of day and we intend to do that next week.

Mr. GINGRICH. Well, I want to reemphasize what the gentleman from Minnesota just said. There may well be one or two Members who in fact read the bill for the first time, consulted with experts, listened to their constituents and changed their minds between 12:58 and 6:17 out of genuine conviction. Those Members should come to the floor and explain that, because certainly they should not be lumped in with those other Members who might just be terrified of going home to face the voters, but I think it is important for the voters, and I hope that we have the widest participation in C-SPAN that we have ever had in people watching and the news media watching next week, because I think voters really need to look at and ask the question, if you are hiring somebody and paying them and they switch their position on a major long term issue of such importance as crime and drugs in a 5-hour period, they owe you a pretty clear explanation of what happened.

I think what we are saying and are willing to assert pretty flatly for the country is that for a very significant number of those people, what happened was that they suddenly realized they were faced with a vote they were afraid of and they were more afraid of the American people than they were of their own liberal Democratic leadership, whereas earlier in the day they had joined in with their liberal Democratic leadership to kill the very bill which they helped pass at the end of the day.

I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. Well, the gentleman is precisely correct and, of course, the difficulty of explaining this to the American people is one of the protections that incumbent Members of Congress have for themselves and that is that we have to discuss procedural elements of legislation with which the average citizen is not familiar and he should not have to be familiar. He is concerned with the substance of the legislation.

The fact is the vote earlier in the day, the vote on moving the previous question, the parliamentary term that most Americans probably have heard but haven't thought about a lot, really was at that time the key vote that was going to determine whether or not we would have an opportunity to bring up the President's crime package. If we indeed moved the previous question, that meant that the legislation would not be subject to amendment and thus we could not bring up the President's crime package. Thus, those that voted yes on the previous question were in essence voting to kill the possibility of bringing up the crime package. Those that voted no wanted to open up the process so that we could talk about the crime package.

Then as the gentleman from Georgia has pointed out, there was an additional manner in which we could bring up that crime package later and we did that in what is called a motion to recommit. This is offered at the end of the legislation. So we find Members who having earlier successfully blocked an attempt to consider the crime bill found then to their dismay that it was going to come up through another parliamentary device and they had no choice but to vote yes or no on it.

Very frankly, those Members who have simply voted no, I do not have any particular quarrel with. I do not agree with them.

I think the crime bill deserved passage, but the Members that I have a real problem with are those that earlier in the day voted not to consider the crime bill and then when they had no choice voted in favor of the crime bill because, let us be honest about it, this is just a little more than a month before the election. Those guys are going to go home and they are going to tell their constituents that "I am for the crime bill," and their constituents will never know that less than 6 hours earlier that same Member did everything in his power to prevent that vote from having taken place. In my judgment that is an act of great hypocrisy.

Mr. GINGRICH. I think, if I can ask the gentleman, as I understand the point you are making, the liberal Democrats who switched are in fact counting on the citizens back home and the news media back home being too stupid to understand the vote. And in a sense this is an act of absolute arrogance to say that you are so dumb that I can vote against you at 12:58 and then come back and vote for you at 6:17 and you will forget 5 hours earlier.

It seems to me that they are really, the liberal Democrats who switched their votes yesterday are really banking on the idea that neither the American people nor the American news media has a 6-hour timeframe, that they literally cannot figure out over a period of 6 hours what they were doing to them.

Mr. WEBER. The gentleman is precisely correct. And the importance of that little exercise goes far beyond just the crime bill, because the vote earlier in the day, the procedural vote that was used by the Democratic majority in the House of Representatives at that time to prevent consideration of the crime bill is really reflective of the norm around the House.

The exception is the vote that took place later in the day when we actually got a vote on the crime bill. But day after day after day as this group has pointed out for the last 18 months the rules of the House and the power of the majority are, in our judgment, abused to prevent action on a balanced budget constitutional amendment, on the line item veto, on enterprise zones, on tuition tax credits, and on a whole series of other legislative initiatives which, whether you support them or not, really have a right to be debated on the floor of the House so that Members can go on and say to their constituents, "This is how I voted, and this is why I voted that way, and now you can cast judgment on my vote because you voters are my employers and you have a right to know how I am doing my job."

But that, unfortunately, is the exception to the rule.

But now we have at least one exception that shows that rule and shows exactly how the game is played around here, and that is on the crime bill. If we could conduct business the way it should be conducted in this House we would have had votes like the vote on the crime package throughout this whole last year, on the balanced budget amendment, on the line item veto, on the enterprise zones, and tuition tax credits, and a whole series of other legislative initiatives. But we would not only have the crime bill, but the American people should understand, based on that vote, how this game is being played in this House of Representatives.

Mr. GINGRICH. Somebody said earlier that at some time possibly we ought to refer to the liberal gimmicks and techniques, that we ought to call it the balanced budget bunk. It seems to me also we ought to be talking about, or somebody ought to consider talking about the backroom boys, that in a sense the backroom boys are those folks that come out here and strangle the American people's legislation when they can do it procedurally, but then give in when they cannot get away with it, and then want the public to be grateful because they were forced to vote the way the public wants.

I think there is something basically wrong with this system where the backroom boys spend a year and three-quarters killing the legislation the American people want.

Mr. WEBER. The gentleman is exactly correct. And there are two beautiful examples of that in this Congress within the last couple of weeks. One was on a fairly unpublicized bill on monetary policy that came out of the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs, and one of our colleagues from the Republican side of the aisle intended to amend that legislation so that the proceedings of the Federal Reserve Board would come to the light of day.

Presently the Federal Reserve Board operates under great secrecy and this colleague wanted to amend that bill so that the American people could know what decisions are being made about monetary policy.

But that issue so frightened the Democratic leadership in this House that the backroom boys, as the gentleman from Georgia puts it, got together, and what they did was they pulled that whole bill and it never came to the floor for a vote or discussion, much less for amendment.

The second example like that is a piece of legislation of which I am a cosponsor, and that is the American Defense Education Act which is an educational initiative supported by many people around the country. It is controversial and I am not suggesting all my colleagues would agree with me on that, but the point is there were a number of amendments that were going to be offered to that legislation, perhaps some amendments on tuition tax credits, perhaps amendments on school prayer. So what happened? Once again the backroom boys got together and they pulled that bill, even after it had been debated for awhile, rather than risk having that bill be amended in a way that would force Members of Congress to go on record on issues like school prayer and tuition tax credits. The backroom boys, as the gentleman from Georgia puts it, have been real busy the last few weeks.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GINGRICH. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. I think what the gentleman says brings up another subject and that is the Enterprise Zone Act that we have been trying to get through for the last number of months. I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota, I have been listening to the Presidential candidate and the Vice Presidential candidate continue to criticize this President for not providing enough jobs to the minority communities.

As I understand it, that Enterprise Zone Act would do just that and yet this bill, as I understand it, has been held up by the same maneuvers that the gentleman from Minnesota was talking about.

Mr. WEBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GINGRICH. I yield briefly.

Mr. WEBER. I thank the gentleman from Georgia for yielding.

The gentleman from California is exactly right. The enterprise zone legislation, we should give some background, just a little bit, the enterprise zone legislation is an initiative which would creatively approach the problems of inner-city poverty and other blighted areas, not by further subsidization but by providing tax relief and regulatory relief to encourage economic growth in those areas.

I have some familiarity with the legislation because in the other body its chief author is my Senator from Minnesota. So I am very interested in the legislation. We have areas in Minnesota that would benefit from this legislation.

The President proposed this legislation immediately upon taking office 4 years ago. This legislation recently was endorsed by the National Conference of Black Mayors. Let me just say that is not normally thought of as a Republican front group. But they are the people that represent those blighted areas, they are the people that understand the problems of inner-city poverty, and they recognize a positive initiative that holds out some hope when they see it. And they endorsed the enterprise zone concept.

But in this House of Representatives where we hear day after day after day this rhetoric about how the Democrats care about the poor people and President Reagan does not, Speaker O'NEILL and the Democratic leadership have refused to permit enterprise zone legislation from even coming up for debate. They care more about the politics of that issue than they do about the problems of people that would benefit from the enterprise zones.

Mr. MACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GINGRICH. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. MACK. I think I want to raise a couple of points. I am certainly not in defense of those who have changed their position in 5 hours and 19 minutes. But I think it is fair to raise here at this point, is there not just a little bit more to it than just walking out on the floor and casting a vote?

I mean are there not some procedural things that have to be taken into consideration?

We do have leadership in the committees around here for the purpose of bringing about an orderly process and an orderly flow of legislation. It seems to me that the case could be made that "Listen, I voted for the rule because there have not been any hearings about that specific legislation, or it has not been approved out of the committee."

Obviously you are not letting this process work if you just arbitrarily want to come to the floor of the House and bring legislation out here so that you can vote on it. Certainly there is some process, some procedure, some outline that we ought to follow.

So I would raise that question with the gentleman.

Mr. GINGRICH. Let me ask the gentleman from Florida, and I want to deal with that question because it is certainly a legitimate, substantive question. Let us assume that the gentleman from Florida in fact had opposed bringing the bill up at 12:58. Let us suppose the gentleman from Florida had stated all of the valid reasons that you just raised and decided in your mind those were good reasons. Did we have any hearings between 12:58 and 6:17?

Mr. MACK. Not that I know of.

Mr. GINGRICH. Did any committees meet?

Mr. MACK. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. GINGRICH. Between 12:58 and 6:17 did any leadership on the other side suddenly decide the bill made sense?

Mr. WEBER. Let me say to the gentleman he is probably slightly mistaken. There probably was one committee that met, the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, and they decided that this vote would hurt their members running for reelection. That is probably the committee that met.

Mr. GINGRICH. I do not think that is the committee that the gentleman from Florida was referring to.

Mr. WEBER. I am sure he was not.

Mr. MACK. The point I am trying to make, though, is there has to be some logic, and I know some people are going to think oh, no, he is just putting this thing on. I am serious now. I mean there have been situations where people walk on the floor, they have to look to their leadership to say is this something we support, do we need to have more hearings on it, is there need for more discussion.

I am for this particular type of legislation.

For example, I may have signed a discharge petition trying to get the balanced budget amendment to the floor of the House, but if someone asked me to bring it up today I would be against it because it has not been brought out of committee. I mean are those logical explanations for why one would vote one way on one issue and change to another later?

Mr. WEBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GINGRICH. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WEBER. I thank the gentleman for yielding and I thank the gentleman from Florida for raising those good questions and would say the answer to all of those questions is "no."

Those are not good reasons in this case.

□ 1550

The crime package that was considered yesterday is a piece of legislation that has not only had hearings in both Houses of Congress but has actually passed the U.S. Senate on a vote of 91 to 1. It is not a piece of legislation that just flew onto the floor out of the clear blue sky and responsible Members came to try and block its hasty consideration. It is a piece of legislation that has been locked up in the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives for this last year.

Mr. MACK. The gentleman is telling me then there really were hearings in the House but the Committee on the Judiciary refused to report it out?

Mr. WEBER. That is correct. Now, there may not have been hearings on every single aspect of it because it was not considered as a whole package in the committee, but most of the elements were subject to extensive hearings and certainly subject to hearings in the other body where it passed that body by 91 to 1.

Mr. GINGRICH. Let me make a point. The logic is circular here. Early in the session the liberal Democrats never quite get around to holding hearings. Later in the session they explain they cannot bring the bill up because they never held hearings.

Now we had the majority leader stand up here today and tell us they are going to bring the liberal phony balanced-budget proposal up next week, what one gentleman called balanced bunk, and that bunk is going to come up without any hearings, without being reported out of committee, without getting a rule except as the leadership demands it, it is being brought out as their gimmick, and I call it a liberal fig leaf that they can hide behind and claim that they are doing something.

So when they want to bring up a bill—we took up a big labor provision this year at the request of big labor, Walter Mondale's ally, with no hearings, no committee meetings, locked up in a much bigger bill so no one could vote on it directly. It was brought straight to the floor and it never went through the procedure.

The lesson is if you are the liberal Democratic leadership and you want it, you get it. The Speaker of the House, TIP O'NEILL, has said that if the President would send a balanced budget up he would get it on the floor within 48 hours.

Well, the important thing for the American people to realize is that he is serious. He has the power as the leader of the majority party to bring that bill to the floor within 48 hours. So the next time a member of the liberal Democratic leadership comes home and says, "Gosh, I would like to have brought that up but I couldn't," you should ask him why they are still supporting the guys that would not bring it up.

But let me take you a step further. We have had 2 years practically since the last election, certainly 1 year and 11 months. In that 1 year and 11 months we had plenty of time to have hearings on constitutional amendments. Yet the majority leader got up here today and said with a perfectly straight face we have had no hearings on the constitutional amendment to balance the budget. Well in fact technically he was wrong, they had hearings in the last Congress. But here is an issue which 80-some percent of the American people favor, which virtually every working American who pays taxes favors, which has the overwhelming support in the country; just the other day the three of us participated in a press conference on the Capitol steps where 3 million postcards were brought in from people around America who want a constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget.

Does the liberal Democratic leadership go "Gosh, with 3 million people sending in a postcard maybe we should hold hearings"? No. Instead they say, "What is the excuse we will use for this week?" The key, yesterday, as the gentleman from Minnesota has pointed out, we had a case study, a laboratory study on how the backroom boys operate. Because what the backroom boys did was they carefully and cleverly in the morning killed the omnibus crime bill and went off to lunch thinking, "Boy, we got out of that one, didn't we?"

And later in the day when they suddenly found they had to vote on it again and they couldn't hide behind procedure, they broke.

I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. MACK. But the gentleman missed my point. I mean, I came out here—and I am playing the role now of a person who voted not to allow a change in the rules—you asked me to come out here and allow the President's crime package to come to the floor with no method for me to bring any amendment forward to make any changes in this legislation. I felt compelled under that situation to vote against you and now then you say it is wrong for me when it was clear that I had a clear-cut vote on the thing, it was either up or down. Obviously I had to make a tough choice.

Mr. GINGRICH. Let me make the point. I would make the point if any of our good friends on the left were to come here, I would say to them quite simply, and next week if they decide to come out after we personally invite them, that I do not understand what changed between 12:58 and 6:17. At 12:58 out of great frustration, that was not the way we wanted to bring up the crime bill. We have begged for months for an open rule, a legitimate debate, plenty of opportunity for amendments, a clean, legitimate process. The back-room boys did not want to do it that way.

So now with only 1 week to go before the Congress quits this year we resorted to a much less desirable procedure. We concede up front that that is not the way it should have been done. And if they had put pressure on their leadership they might have gotten the bill up in a more responsible and more appropriate way.

But let me go on for just a second. I would say, if one of the backroom boys came out, would ask them: What changed? I have no complaint with those Members, those liberal Members who thought the bill was wrong at 12:58 and who honestly thought the bill was wrong at 6:17, who thought, "We shouldn't use this procedure" because the procedure did not change. You had one up-or-down vote in the morning, you had one in the afternoon. That is the only vote they got. In the morning at 12:58, early afternoon, they voted it down. In the late afternoon they voted it in.

I would just ask them, since nothing changed, there were no committee hearings, the procedure was not any better, the bill was not any different, but what changed was that the American people had a chance to look at the second vote and they were scared to vote with the liberal Democratic leadership.

I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

But there was a change, though, and it is illustrative of the way in which this Congress acts. The change was that we were no longer voting on just a procedural motion and the liberal Democrats that felt very confident voting to kill the crime bill through a procedural motion no longer felt so confident about voting to kill it when it was not perceived as procedure but actually as substantive.

The problem with that is that is how liberal Democrats in the House of Representatives protect themselves, not just on the crime issue but issue after issue after issue. Do you know what is really ironic? What is ironic is one of our colleagues has referred to President Reagan as the Teflon-coated Presidency. Nothing seems to stick to him, they say.

This is really the Teflon-coated Congress, or the vacuum-packed Congress, or whatever other analogy you want. Members of Congress can avoid accountability on just any issue they want, if they are part of the liberal Democratic majority and are willing to abuse the rules to do it.

That is exactly what happened to this Congress.

Members of the House of Representatives have not been held accountable by their constituents on the crime bill, on the balanced-budget amendment, voluntary school prayers, enterprise zones, tuition tax credits, or the amendments to the ERA supported by various groups, or any other controversial pieces of legislation because the liberal Democratic majority protects itself through the procedures of the House. That is what changed between noon and 5 or 6 o'clock in the evening, that protection of procedure was stripped from the vote and the liberal Democrats felt themselves exposed to their constituents so, of course, they had to vote in favor of the crime bill.

Mr. GINGRICH. In a sense, they lost the camouflage of process and had to stand up.

I yield further to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. MACK. What the gentleman is saying I think is that if an individual changed his vote and attempts to hide behind one which is a procedural vote and the other had substance, is that those individuals should have been doing something prior to those votes to see that the legislation got to the floor. In other words, if they were really for that particular piece of legislation and the backroom boys, as you keep referring to them, were not allowing it to take place, then it was really their responsibility to do whatever is necessary to try to get that legislation out for discussion and debate. Is that what the gentleman is saying?

Mr. GINGRICH. Sure.

I am also saying something deeper, Mr. Speaker, because I, like you, lived through yesterday. I came out in the morning, and we talked about somehow getting a vote on the crime bill. We got our vote. I looked at it and I said we did not pass it. But we had 25 folks on the Democratic side who voted with us. We gave it a good shot and it was over.

I sort of felt, "We will go back home and we will make the case." Well, here are 60, 70, 100 vulnerable Democrats who voted to kill the crime bill. That was a legitimate argument, they had their say, and they voted their way.

We tried to make a case. We came back 5 hours later, 5 hours and 19 minutes to be precise, and suddenly I saw the very Democrats who that morning had voted to kill the bill, pivoting, now that it was an open vote, now that they could not hide, and they knew what they were going to do.

□ 1600

I knew that a great number of them, not every one, and I am certainly not accusing anyone individually, but as a group they were going to go back through the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, they were going to go back home and suddenly, after we had worked for a year, after their leadership had bottled up the bill, after their leadership had fought us every inch of the way, after they had voted to kill it in the morning, suddenly, 5 hours later, they were going to seek to grab the harvest and convince the voters that, "Gosh, I have always been with you."

It was just wrong. It is just lain wrong for a politician to go back home, having tried in the early afternoon to kill something, to now come back, immediately after lunch they tried to kill something and before dinner they voted for it and now they want the American people to forget the lunch vote and remember the dinner vote. That is wrong.

The American people ought to know that these folks, basically, zigzagged, or flip-flopped, or whatever, but that their goal had been early on to kill in the backroom, the vote. That is why I talked about the backroom boys. When the American public wants to know why is Washington a mess, why is Congress a mess, why can we not pass a constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget, why can we not balance the budget, why can we not get Government under control, it is a very simple reason. The backroom boys promised the American people's agenda back home and vote to kill it in the backroom up here.

So, I think next week will be very exciting. For two reasons. First of all, the liberal Democratic leadership now faces a choice. They can either let the crime bill go through, and we all know that the Senate, which voted 91 to 1, is going to be very receptive to accepting the crime bill. At 91 to 1, I am not even sure the one guy is on the conference. So, the Senate is going to say, "Fine, we will be glad to accept the crime bill."

If the crime bill is killed, then like enterprise zones it will have been killed in conference by the liberal Democratic leadership.

The first thing that will be curious when we get back here on Monday is: Does the crime bill live or did they once again get it into a backroom and kill it?

The second question we have got to face, equally important, is—our good friend from Florida here has been trying to be of assistance and has been trying to role play a little bit with possible arguments of our friends on the left who voted both ways yesterday—but will they have any willingness to come down and talk. Because I am certainly going to join with my friend from Minnesota and make sure that we hand deliver an invitation on Monday to every office that flip-flopped and invite every single Member who voted both ways to come down and to share with us and with the American people their rationale. Because I think it is important that the American people and the news media and the politicians focus on responsible honest Government. I think that this discussion of whether we are going to have a grassroots Congress or we are going to have a backroom Congress, whether we are going to be responsive to the American people, or we are going to be responsive to the liberal Democratic leadership, and whether we are going to tell the truth about what we do. I think those are very important discussions. I think it is very important that we continue and the American people continue to demand not just that you get a politician, as the gentleman from California said, who is with you the last 4 weeks before the election because he is scared, but you actually get representatives who will be with you for 2 full years.

After all, it is the people who hire us for 2 years. It is not the backroom boys.

I think that yesterday's vote, yesterday's RECORD, is as classic an example of what is wrong with Washington and what is wrong with the House as anything we have ever seen.

Mr. WEBER. If the gentleman will yield, an additional point that I would like to make because the average person that I talk to often says, "Well, we get frustrated. It seems that both parties are just interested in politics." There is a tendency on the part of the average person to say, "Well, that's just politics. Both parties engage in it."

Sometimes that is true, but let us make it very clear on the question of backroom politics and the camouflage of procedure the gentleman from Georgia has been discussing, that is not true of both parties and it is not true for a very explicit reason.

Only one party controls the House of Representatives, that is the Democratic Party. Only one party has its man in the Speaker's chair, that is the Democratic Party. Only one party wrote the rules governing this session of Congress, that is the Democratic Party. Only one party has committee chairmen, that is the Democratic Party. And only one party has it within its power to use the rules and the procedures of the House to protect their Members from having to cast tough votes and that is the Democratic Party.

Republicans have no such protection. We have to cast the tough votes on whatever items the Democrats want to bring up. And that is as it should be. I am not complaining about that at all.

But I am saying that on this one particularly important area there is a fundamental difference between the two parties. It is not just politics as usual in both parties. Our party has to cast the tough votes, but the Democrats can use the rules and the power of the Speaker to prevent it from happening as they do day after day after day.

Mr. MACK. I want to try one more time. I am a pretty reasonable person. I came to Congress realizing that 435 people had to have some kind of rules and procedures to carry out business. I understood that one of the ways of doing that was that there were certain committees set up to deal with certain pieces of legislation, that somewhere along the line someone decides what committee is going to have jurisdiction over what particular piece of legislation.

In this particular case, it was decided that the Judiciary Committee should deal with questions dealing with crime. They have been dealing with that. They have been attempting to deal with that and the gentleman now says it is wrong for me to come in and support the procedure in saying that we ought to let this committee process work.

Mr. GINGRICH. Since we only have a minute left, let me explain why that argument is wrong on two levels.

First, the liberal Democratic leadership as reported by "Congressional Quarterly" deliberately turned the Judiciary Committee into the graveyard of legislation and deliberately bottles up legislation there to stop the American people from getting a vote.

Second, it is within the rules of the House to do precisely what we did. We did not break the rules of the House, we used the rules of the House. The House as a whole always has the power to take from any committee any bill it wants to, if it votes to do so.

Yesterday we used the rules to allow the entire House, reflecting the American people, to change the Judiciary Committee, which in fact did not represent the American people and to bring to the floor a bill that the Judiciary Committee had tried to kill.

So, I think we used the rules to represent the American people yesterday. We did what the American people want done. I think again I will come back and say to you, even if you were concerned at 12:58 about procedure, how could you possibly justify 5 hours later switching your vote, since the procedure had not changed. It was still an up or down case.

I think this has been a fascinating thing. I look forward next week to a further dialog.

THE URBAN HOMESTEAD ACT OF 1984: A PLAN FOR REVITALIZING OUR INNER CITIES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP] is recognized for 30 minutes.

● Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, today, I am introducing along with my colleagues the Urban Homestead Act of 1984 to help fulfill the national goal of a "decent home and a decent living environment for every American family." Under the act, the poor living in public housing will have the chance to buy their homes from the Government at a large discount and to manage their own projects.

Homeownership is nearly synonymous with the American dream. Yet today, most urban poor find it nearly impossible to own a home. Not just becasue their income is low, interest rates high, and their creditworthiness doubtful, but also because it has been our social policy to gather the poor in public housing projects.

We want to let these people know that their aspiration, their hopes, and their dreams are our own. That the American dream of homeownership is not just for the well-to-do, or the middle class, but also for poor people who live in the most blighted areas of our inner cities. They too yearn for homeownership—a home they can afford, a home in which to raise a family in security and independence, a home in which to take pride while building and improving for the future and for their children.

Under our bill, a tenant or tenant association could purchase their dwelling at no more than 25 percent of market value and no down payment. The public housing authority would take back a mortgage at reasonable rates—no more than 70 percent of market interest rates. Tenants could build equity in their homes by helping to maintain the housing project, perhaps by painting, cleaning, or making improvements. To discourage quick resale of any home, however, a portion of any windfall profits realized within 5 years of the initial sale would be recaptured.

To protect all public housing tenants, our bill provides a number of important safeguards, both for tenants, and homeowners:

First, ownership is a voluntary alternative to renting. Tenants who don't choose to buy would continue to rent as now from the public housing authority or receive a housing voucher from the Government equal to or better than their current housing assistance. In any case, no tenants could lose their home as a consequence of this act.

Second, only tenants themselves, organized in a homeowners association, would initiate and direct the conversion to private ownership. The homeownership effort always rests squarely in the hands of tenants.

Third, homeownership would be transferred to tenants only after the Department of Housing and Urban Development [HUD] certifies that they and the homeowners association can afford the cost and responsibilities of homeownership. This prevents premature or hasty transfer of ownership.

Fourth, HUD must bring the housing up to decent standards before being sold.

My legislation also would mobilize the full resources of HUD, other Government agencies, and civic groups to provide tenants with management training, education, and technical assistance. Many residents can manage their own projects better than the Government and my bill guarantees them this opportunity.

Homeownership is not a panacea. We have not changed any existing support programs designed to help the needy. We do feel, however, that homeownership should be an option for those families receiving some steady income at the lowest range of the income scale who want to own their own home. Even if only a few tenants want to buy their home, we feel that they should be given that right.

Taxpayers also gain from the Urban Homestead Act. Aside from construction costs, taxpayers now pay over $3 billion yearly in operating and modernizing subsidies for public housing, about $2,100 per unit a year. We believe that homesteading would help reduce Government housing subsidies and significantly raise property values for businesses and taxpayers in neighborhoods near public housing projects.

But the effort is really concerned with more than buildings or budgets. It deals with the overall problem of community and neighborhood development. Far too many public housing projects have become vast, gray, undifferentiated slums. Tenant managed projects, by comparison, have not only demonstrated dramatic success in modernizing and improving previously rundown projects, but they have also reduced crime, drug abuse, and even teenage pregnancies.

Homeownership also encourages stable and intact families, creates a longer outlook on life and the future, and gives the poor new reasons to work and save. It promises to enhance community spirit, create pride of ownership, and provide greater stability of neighborhoods in areas often suffering from despair, cynicism, and poverty. Homeowners need never fear being forced out of their home. Considering the greater security and peace of mind, the tremendous boost in morale and dignity, and the opportunity to rebuild our inner cities, shouldn't we be looking at ways to turn tenants into homeowners? There is no more rewarding investment than helping some of America's urban poor realize that dream.●

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that Mr. BYRD be excused as a conferee, on the part of the Senate, on the bill (H.R. 6028) "An act making appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health, and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes."

CRIME BILL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WEBER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, we have been discussing here this afternoon one of the critical issues in this election campaign and I suppose that is entirely appropriate because we are now down to a matter of just a few weeks before this election. We have been discussing that issue which is the crime issue, the politics of it, which we find somewhat unfortunate, the House of Representatives notwithstanding. We did actually win a great victory in that the crime bill at long last, a bill which many of us had tried to bring to the floor literally every day of this legislative session, was at long last passed. Passed after having first been passed through the U.S. Senate on a vote of 91 to 1, now passed through the House of Representatives.

Again, as we have pointed out, a lot of Members had to stretch themselves out of shape to be on both sides of the crime issue in the course of that voting, but the fact is we nonetheless did pass it.

I just want to say at this point that we need to thank the group probably more than any other that is responsible for the passage of the crime bill yesterday. That group is the Republican candidates for Congress out there that were putting pressure on those same Democratic Members all through this year for preventing action on the crime bill to see to it that they would indeed bring it up.

Had it not been for that grassroots political pressure from citizen politicians in their home districts, in my judgment, the vote would not have taken place at all yesterday or had it taken place it certainly would not have gone in the direction which it did.

So I want to thank those people who have been putting themselves on the line out there, those Republican candidates that are running for office and suggest to them and to their supporters that their efforts are already beginning to bear some fruit.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about a second issue which I think is probably going to be the most important single issue coming up in this particular campaign, and that is the issue of taxes. At the Democratic National Convention, the nominee of the Democratic Party probably made more headlines than anything else by what was viewed as a very courageous pledge at the time, that being that he would raise taxes. And he then said, "Of course, the President will raise taxes, too." And there ensued a great debate over whether or not the President was going to raise taxes.

At the Republican Convention in Dallas, the Republican National convention adopted a platform that specifically said we oppose tax increases. We specifically said we do not with to increase taxes next year. Republican candidates across the country have been telling the voters no, we do not want to raise taxes. Republican Members of Congress have been pledging themselves to oppose tax increases.

The Democrats, at first, said that this pledge of Mr. Mondale's was a very courageous thing and that indeed we did have to bite the bullet and enact a massive tax increase in order to reduce the deficit. Then we began to actually discuss the dimensions of what the Democratic tax increase would come to. And if you begin to look at what the Democratic Presidential candidate, the Democratic candidate for Congress and the Democratic platform say in this year, you find some things that are sort of interesting.

First of all, you find, contrary to their rhetoric on the issue of national defense, that the Democrats are not calling for reductions in national defense. I am not criticizing that. I am trying to make a very important point about where the two parties are positioned on the issue of the deficit. I say that because in my district and in many others I think people have the impression that the Democrats will eliminate the budget deficit by cutting the defense budget, and so the magnitude of the tax increase they support will be fairly minimal and not too burdensome on the average taxpayer. The Democratic Presidential candidate and the Democratic platform do not call for reducing the defense budget. I think that is a wise decision. They call for about a 3- to 4-percent increase in real terms after inflation in the defense budget. That would mean, in this particular year, we would have about a 7- or 8-percent increase in the defense budget because we have had about a 4-percent inflation rate.

What did we get last year in the defense budget in real terms? Last year the real dollar increase in the defense budget was 3.9 percent.

Now, that is not what the President originally requested, I understand that. But that is ultimately what we got after the President's requests worked their way through the Senate and worked their way through the House.

After the first 4 years of the Reagan administration we will probably have achieved an average increase in the defense budget over that period of time of 7 to 8 percent, and the Democrats are talking about 4 percent. Well, there is an important difference there. And again, I am not criticizing the Democrats for their stand. I am only saying that when the American people think about how the Democrats are going to solve the problem of the deficit, they should not delude themselves into thinking they are going to do it by gutting the defense budget. I do not want them to gut the defense budget, but it is important to know that that is not how they are going to balance the budget. They are going to increase the defense buildup more slowly than the President. Perhaps that is wise, perhaps it is not wise. But they are not going to cut the defense budget. They are going to increase it in real terms. The only Democratic Presidential candidates that talked about real cuts in the defense budget were Jesse Jackson and George McGovern. Outside of that, there is a consensus within the Democratic Party, as there is within the Republican Party, that there should be some level of real dollar increase in the defense budget, and the debate is over the magnitude of that increase. And, as I pointed out, it is a debate basically between 4 and 7 percent, not a much larger spread.

So the first thing we have to understand is that the Democrats are not going to solve the budget deficit problem by gutting the defense budget. So we have to look at what they are going with the nondefense portion of our Federal budget which, after all, is 70 to 75 percent of the Federal budget. Is it there that the Democrats are going to bite the bullet and make the tough decisions? The candidate of the Democratic Party even said in his acceptance speech that there is no laundry list of promises in the Democratic platform. With all due respect to the former Senator from my State, that is just not true. I have read the Democratic platform. I have debated Members on the other side of the aisle on the Democratic platform. It is a laundry list of promises. If you read through the Democratic platform, you find fairly specific promises on the environment, the elderly, education, poverty, hunger, foreign aid, right down the list.

Now, I am not going to suggest again that some of those expenditures are not meritorious or that the causes that they pursue are not good causes. I am only suggesting that in terms of the approach the Democrats are going to take to the budget deficit they are not going to reduce the deficit by cutting the domestic side of our budget any more than they are going to cut the defense side. Indeed, there are outside authorities who have analyzed the Democratic platform and the promises of this Presidential candidate and estimate the increased spending necessary to fulfill the promises of the Democratic platform on the domestic side of the budget at as high as $150 billion the first year.

Now, let us be realistic. I understand that every promise written into a party's platform is not enacted in its first year. A party platform is a longer term guide to the ideas that a party seeks to implement over time. Nonetheless, when the thrust of your whole platform is toward more spending on domestic programs, you probably can expect that a Democratic administration and a Democratic Congress will end up increasing domestic spending to some extent. We do not know how much, but certainly some of those promises will be kept, whether it is the promises for national health insurance, at least a $50 billion ticket, or an immediate cleanup of all hazardous waste, about a $150 billion item, or promises of radically increased funding for education, which could be in the tens of billions of dollars. We do not know which promises will be kept and to what extent.

But again, if you look at the domestic side of the budget, the Democrats are promising us more. That is as it should be. That reflects their philosophy. They believe the Government should solve problems, and so they reflect that philosophy in their platform by pledging to spend more money on the domestic side of our budget.

But what have we just said? We have said that the Democrats are pledging themselves to a rate of increase in the defense budget only slightly slower than the President's and that they are pledging themselves to a fairly substantial increase in nondefense spending.

So the Democrats, in essence, are promising to increase the whole Federal budget.

In view of that, one has to ask how they can keep their promise of reducing the Federal budget deficit by two-thirds. It is only in that context that the American people can begin to understand the full magnitude of the tax increase that Walter Mondale was promising the American people when he stood up courageously before the Democratic Convention and said, "I am going to raise your taxes." He was not talking about a small tax increase. He was not talking about increasing liquor taxes or cigarette taxes. He was talking about hundreds of billions of dollars of new taxes loaded on the working people of this country. And as that realization has begun to sink in, we have seen a strange phenomenon take place. We have seen all the Democratic Members of Congress, who initially supported Walter Mondale over his rivals for President, running away from that Mondale tax plan. And now all across this country we find Democrats, literally, who helped nominate Walter Mondale and who cheered his nomination in San Francisco, distancing themselves as quickly as they can from the tax increase that has become so unpopular with the American people.

I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. MACK. You have taken the approach of building on all of the promises and all of the positions that the Democratic platform calls for as far as spending is concerned. I want to start from the other end. The other end is the conclusion that we all saw, that is how much would taxes be increased, how much would spending be increased, and therefore how would you solve the deficit problem. When we looked at the set of numbers that came out with the Mondale tax plan, we saw, at least from my vantage point, what they were saying to the country their view of what their goals for this country were. When you look at a budget I think there is more to it than just numbers. One of the things they taught me in accounting was that when you look at a balance sheet, you just do not look at the numbers. You try to ask yourself the question: What are behind those numbers? What makes those numbers up? What is the plan or the idea or the program of the particular company that this particular balance sheet represents?

The interesting thing is that when you look at Mondale's tax plan it tells you a couple other things. It really points out where the emphasis is placed. Point in fact: Mondale says he is going to increase—and therefore reduce, in his thought, the deficit—taxes by $85 billion. The first point that I think I would raise is that today I think there is a great deal of thought that has been developed, written, discussed, debated, which clearly says that one could expect that as you raise taxes that you are actually going to reduce revenues to the Federal Government. Point No. 1.

Point No. 2 is that in that plan—and they go out to 1989—it says that we are going to reduce the deficit by $17 billion because of what he has been able to do about encouraging economic growth in the country. $17 billion. I mean the point that he made there is that he thought that he could encourage the country to grow at 3.6 percent real growth. On the other hand, you and I have both said that the key difference is that we place the emphasis on economic growth.

It is in fact economic growth that puts people back to work, that creates jobs.

Mr. WEBER. It creates revenue.

Mr. MACK. It creates revenue. I would argue the case that it is tax increases that really cost jobs. One might just look at the Superfund bill that was in the House just several weeks ago. On one hand, we have a group of individuals that talk about the need for the creation of jobs and economic growth, and at the same time, pass legislation that increases taxes by $10 billion, and in essence has created a bill that encourages chemical companies to produce the jobs in Canada and Mexico.

I thank the gentleman for raising the points today about Mondale's tax plan.

Mr. WEBER. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. Since the gentleman serves on the Budget Committee, he speaks with some authority on that subject.

The gentleman is exactly correct. I tried to present sort of a macrolook at what the Democrats are promising to point out very simply that they are going to increase defense spending, they are going to dramatically increase domestic spending, and if they indeed then are going to keep their promise of balancing the budget. The tax increase that we are going to get is not a little one, it is a great, big tax increase.

As the gentleman was beginning to point out, the story becomes even worse when you look at some of the specifics of the approach that Mr. Mondale would take to raising taxes. Because, first of all, as the gentleman points out, he is suggesting to us that by massively increasing taxes we will increase economic growth. That is just not true. There is no school of thought that suggests that a big tax increase is going to get the economy moving more quickly. So that part of Mr. Mondale's analysis is incorrect. If that part of his analysis is incorrect, what does it mean? It means that the deficit will be larger than he is projecting is if his tax increases pass.

In addition to that, he is saying, because it is a political thing to say, that all these taxes are going to be levied on the wealthy. You know, we are going to raise taxes on people earning more than $100,000 and surtaxes and loophole closings and all that stuff. That is good politics. The fact is, though, in order to balance the budget by taxing only the rich, you would have to confiscate the incomes, every nickel everyone earning more than $26,999 a year.

The fact is, this is not a wealthy country, nor is it a poor country. This is a middle-class country and the average person understands that. When you are going to have a big tax increase, you are going to have to tax the middle class. But because he is promising to get those revenues from the wealthy, as some people are expected to believe that they will not have to pay any of the additional burden.

However, we find that something has happened under the Reagan tax reduction program in the last 3 years that is very interesting in that regard. Under the Reagan tax reduction program, the Democrats have been charging that the rich would get a big break. The facts are in; we do not need to debate that as a theory anymore. We now know what has happened to the contributions to revenues from the different income brackets. The fact is that since the tax cut went into effect in 1981, tax revenues contributed by wealthy Americans have increased as a percent of revenues, while those earning less than $50,000 have contributed less as a percentage of total revenues. The reason for that is nothing magical, the reason is that when you are making a whole lot of money, when you are one of the rich people that Mr. Mondale says he is going to raise taxes on, you put your money into tax shelters. Well, when you reduce tax rates, you also reduce the incentive to shelter income because all of a sudden you are saving 70 cents on $1 that you invest in a tax shelter; you are only saving 50 cents.

So we find some degree less investment in tax shelters, and some degree greater investment in productive and taxable investments. What is going to happen if now we reverse course and we decide, as Mr. Mondale suggests, we are going to raise taxes on the rich? We are not going to get the revenues; we are going to drive that income back into tax shelters where it was in 1979 and 1980.

There is a second part of the Mondale tax increase program that is not accurate. We are not going to get all those revenues. As you begin to look through his program and you find all these areas, the economic growth forecasts, the revenue pickup by taxing the rich, the revenue enhancement gain by reducing intrest rates to 7.5 percent, which he says will come about. It is interesting, the Democrats laughed at the Republicans when we suggested that. That is not going to happen any more under Mr. Mondale than it is going to happen under us.

You take all those things and put them together and you find that his program is not going to achieve even what he thinks it is. So what are you left with? Still bigger tax increases that will be necssary to balance the budget on the middle-class people. Again, that is why all across this country we find Democratic Members of Congress saying, "Oh, not me, I am not for that Mondale tax increase, that must be some other Democrat that is for that Mondale tax increase."

I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. MACK. When one really looks at it, the risk inherent in the Mondale tax plan is enormous, as the gentleman has already pointed out. They are not talking about massive cuts in defense spending, not at all. In fact, if you want to put real dollars on that, the difference between the two general thrusts of the two parties is about $12 billion annually.

Mr. WEBER. That is what we are arguing over; about $12 billion in defense spending.

Mr. MACK. That is not something that we ought to look at lightly; that is a large sum of money. But in terms of $170 billion deficits, the point I would make is do not let anybody mislead you into thinking that you are going to solve deficit problems by the difference in the attitudes between the two parties about defense spending.

Second, you have already raised the point about the emphasis on the nondefense side. In fact, Mondale has talked about he has got at least $30 billion. He admits openly that he has got $30 billion of spending increases. So what we have here, and the third element to that is a raising of taxes. So you have got increased defense spending, increased domestic spending, increased taxes, which most of us feel today would be counterproductive in a growing economy, as we have. Most likely it would bring about a huge deficit as opposed to the deficit reduction that he is talking about.

Third, let me go back to the point that you raised about the evidence that we have as far as the impact of the changes in the tax law. If you take three categories and start at $100,000 and up, those areas everybody wants to go out and make sure that we get a lot of money from those folks, those three categories, $100,000 to $500,000; $500,000 to $1 million; and $1 million and up, are the only three categories where there were increased revenues into the Federal Government. Those are the only three. Every other breakdown reduced revenues to the Federal Government.

In fact, in the category of $100,000 to $500,000 the revenues increased by 6 percent. In the next category from $500,000 to $1 million, they increased by 38 percent, and $1 million and over, the revenues to the Federal Government increased by 43 percent as a result of a reduction in the tax rate.

Mr. WEBER. The gentleman makes a very important point. Of course, what does all this lead us to? Well, as we pointed out, what we are seeing from the Democratic Members of Congress is a promise for a big tax increase. But their plan is flawed, and so it will yield not smaller deficits, but larger deficits for the reason the gentleman has just pointed out.

What then is their response? Well, we know what their response is; their response is the same it has been for the last 20 years: Still bigger tax increase. That is threatening to the whole future of the American economy.

You know, when I first ran for Congress in 1980, I remember three specific statistics that I thought were tremendously telling and were much of the reason of why I ran for Congress. That was the measurements of productivity, investment, and savings in the American economy. I compared our rates of productivity, investment and savings to the other major industrialized nations of the Western World. Not Communist bloc countries, not Third World countries, but Italy, and France, and Canada, and Great Britain, and West Germany, and Japan, and the industrialized Western nations. Of those nine nations, where did we rank? Last in savings, last in investment, last in productivity.

The reason that that was important in my judgment and that that was very central to my campaign was that if you think about it, those are the three measurements of the promise that the American economy holds for our future.

□ 1630

If you do not save and if you do not invest and if you do not remain productive, you cannot promise a better standard of living for the next generation to come.

And so, rebuilding those and the other building blocks that go into our capacity as an economy and as a country to increase people's standard of living I think was central to what we have been trying to do the last 4 years.

Now we find the Democratic candidate for President and Democratic Members of Congress committed to a program that will explicitly reverse that process, load heavy new burdens of taxation on the American economy. Once again attacking savings, attacking investment, attacking productivity, ultimately fueling inflation and moving us back to what was called the stagnation of the 1970's, both inflation and a stagnant economy.

Now, I would not suggest for a second that we Republicans have all the answers, that we have solved all the problems. We have not. But we have brought down the inflation rate. We have improved productivity. We have expanded investment. We have reduced unemployment. We have solved a lot of those problems.

I think we have also made the tax system a little less burdensome on the average American and I think that our party and our President and our candidates for President stand better equipped to deal with the problems of the economy and the problem of the budget deficit in the next 4 years than the people who really created this whole economic mess in the first place over the 1970's.

I thank the gentleman from Florida for participating in this special order with me. I look forward to joining him throughout the remainder of this congressional session as we discuss these and the other important issues that confront the American people.

I just want to again make the point for my colleagues that next Tuesday we intend to be discussing the votes on the crime bill and Members who cast votes on both sides of that issue should be notified that their votes may well be discussed here on the floor of the House.

We intend to get written notification to all such Members and they may well want to come down and participate in that special order next Tuesday.

I thank the gentleman from Florida for his contribution and yield back the balance of my time.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the Conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5899) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of said District for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and Senate in explanation of the effect of the actions agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

CONDITION OF CITY STREETS

The conferees are concerned with the condition of the city's highways and streets and the rate of resurfacing. The conferees direct District officials to review the street resurfacing program and, when considering reprogrammings, to give first priority to street resurfacing and maintenance projects.

BUDGET JUSTIFICATIONS

The conferees are concerned that the justification material prepared by the District to support the annual budget request was not as helpful as it should have been. The conferees were relatively pleased with the justifications prepared to support the fiscal year 1984 request. However, this year's justifications seemed to undergo a radical change under the guise of "improvement." The information and format in the justifications have evolved over a number of years based on experience and need, and therefore changes should be made cautiously.

Very basic to the usefulness of this material is a logical starting point. For every Federal government agency, it is the amount approved by the Congress in the previous budget. For the District, that is not always the case, even though the House Committee stated in its report accompanying the District's fiscal year 1983 appropriation bill, "It is absolutely necessary that information submitted to justify a request start with the amount approved by the Congress for that program and item." In the case of one agency that was involved in a consolidation, the close-out showed 928 authorized positions which agreed with the number approved by the Congress, but the new agency showed 982 positions, a difference of 54, and while it could have been caused by a typographical error, the total for the series of numbers was 982. In another case, several agencies were absorbed into a new department, but nowhere in the fiscal year 1985 justifications was there a budget reflecting a transfer out to the new department nor were any transfers shown into the new department even though there was no such department in the fiscal year 1984 budget.

The forms in the fiscal year 1984 and earlier justifications had been carefully designed by professionals and the result was a design that was easy to read. That is not the case for fiscal year 1985. District officials should keep in mind that the justifications are prepared not just for budget analysts, but also for the public and others who do not use them day in and day out.

Accordingly, the conferees direct District officials to consult with the House and Senate Subcommittees on District of Columbia Appropriations prior to preparing the justification forms and material for the fiscal year 1986 budget. The conferees wish to place District officials on notice that beginning with the fiscal year 1986 budget, the Committees will not hold any hearings until the justifications meet the Committees' requirements.

The following is excerpted from the conference report on the Second Supplemental Appropriations Act for 1984:

[Excerpt from p. 44 of House Report No. 98-977 filed August 10, 1984, accompanying H.R. 6040, the Second Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1984, Public Law 98-396 approved August 22, 1984]

Budget requests and justifications.—The conferees have added language requiring that all budget requests and justifications for the District of Columbia government start with the amounts appropriated in the most recently enacted appropriation act and then explain with some clarity the changes from those amounts to the current budget request. The justifications prepared to explain the fiscal year 1984 supplemental were lacking not only because they did not include a general overview but also the "original budget" column included three appropriation accounts which started with amounts that were somewhere between the previous appropriation and the revised request with no explanation of the discrepancy. In addition, the fiscal plan had two columns, one for the original budget and one for the revised budget, but for some reason there was no column to show the change although there was plenty of space on the page for such a column. These omissions or lapses result in wasted time not only by the Committees but also by District employees who have to answer the questions which could and should have been answered very simply by including adequate information in the justifications. The conferees wish to place District officials on notice that beginning with the fiscal year 1986 budget, the Committees will not hold any hearings until the justifications meet the Committees requirements, and hearings will not be held just for the agencies whose budgets are in order. A delay by the Committees in holding hearings could result in the District being included in a stop-gap funding measure at the previous year's spending levels with no allowance for new programs. District officials are being placed on notice at this time so they will have adequate time to properly prepare their justification material.

FEDERAL PAYMENT TO THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Amendment No. 1: Appropriates $425,000,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $386,000,000 as proposed by the House. The additional amount of $39,000,000 above the House allowance reflects the increase in the Federal payment authorized in Public Law 98-316 approved June 12, 1984.

LOANS TO THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA FOR CAPITAL OUTLAY

Amendment No. 2: Deletes paragraph authorizing and appropriating Federal loans of $155,000,000 proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate. The conferees are agreed that language inserted under section 131 will allow the District government to obtain funds for capital expenditures from the commercial bond market.

CRIMINAL JUSTICE INITIATIVE

Amendment No. 3: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which appropriates $9,873,000 to continue various initiatives within the District's Department of Corrections, Superior Court, Board of Parole, and public school system. Included in the allowance are $6,215,000 and 396 positions for the Department of Corrections to continue the vocational and basic education programs started in fiscal year 1984; $1,821,000 and 21 positions for the Superior Court to provide salaries for seven new judges and support staff authorized pursuant to Public Law 98-235, staff for retired judges actively serving the Superior Court as well as staff to conduct timely probation revocation hearings and handle the increase in the probation supervision caseload in the Court's Social Services Division; $335,000 and 10 positions to assist the Board of Parole in implementing proposed new rules on the issuance of warrants and revocation of parole; and $1,502,000 and 24 positions for the public school system to combat truancy and to implement the teacher and school incentive programs as recommended by the Task Force on Merit Pay for Teachers which the Congress funded in last year's appropriation bill.

GOVERNMENTAL DIRECTION AND SUPPORT

Amendment No. 4: Appropriates $88,439,000 instead of $88,606,000 as proposed by the House and $87,872,000 as proposed by the Senate. The reduction of $167,000 below the House allowance will provide the District of Columbia Retirement Board with a total of $667,000 from the general fund instead of $834,000 as proposed by the House and $100,000 as proposed by the Senate. Of the Board's total FY 1985 budget of $3,337,000, the balance of $2,670,000 or 80 percent of the Board's total budget will be paid from investment earnings.

Amendment No. 5: Provides that $667,000 of the amount appropriated for the District of Columbia Retirement Board shall be derived from the general fund instead of $834,000 as proposed by the House and $100,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 6: Provides that $2,670,000 of the amount appropriated for the District of Columbia Retirement Board shall be derived from earnings of the applicable retirement funds instead of $2,503,000 as proposed by the House and $3,237,000 as proposed by the Senate.

PUBLIC SAFETY AND JUSTICE

Amendment No. 7: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert the following: $509,917,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference action appropriates $509,917,000 instead of $471,176,000 as proposed by the House and $504,897,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Metropolitan Police Department.—The conference action provides $144,220,000 as proposed by the House instead of $143,512,000 as proposed by the Senate. The increase of $708,000 above the Senate allowance includes $500,000 which will permit the department to complete the replacement of its motorcycle fleet of 327 units and purchase uniforms sufficient for warehousing so they are readily available when needed by new recruits or officers for exchange. District officials have acknowledged that there is an insufficient stock of various sizes of uniforms to clothe recruits and the inventory is insufficient to meet the replacement needs of veteran officers. The conferees direct District officials to take appropriate action and properly stock sufficient uniforms so such shortages will not occur in the future. The conferees have included $1,894,000 as proposed by the House for the operation of the police and fire clinic. This amount represents an increase of $208,000 over the budget request and should allow the clinic to operate without reducing the quality of services to police officers and firefighters.

Police and Fire Retirement System.—The conference action provides $109,007,000 instead of $107,100,000 as proposed by the House and $109,700,000 as proposed by the Senate. The increase of $1,907,000 above the House allowance reflects the District's amended budget request, which was subsequently revised by District officials, and is funded with part of the addition Federal payment of $39 million authorized in Public Law 98-316 included in Amendment No. 1.

Court of Appeals.—The conference action provides $3,213,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $3,155,000 as proposed by the House. The increase of $58,000 above the House allowance is to cover increased fees for attorneys to prepare, grade, and review the District bar examinations and conduct investigations into the moral character of applicants for admission to the bar. This increase, which was authorized by the Court on January 23, 1984, is more than offset by the increase from $200 to $300 in the fee for admission to the District bar on motion.

Superior Court.—The conference action provides $37,416,000 and 983 positions as proposed by the Senate instead of $35,595,000 and 962 positions as proposed by the House. The increase of $1,821,000 and 21 positions above the House allowance is part of the criminal justice initiative (Amendment No. 3) and consists of (1) $1,205,000 for the salaries of seven new judges, authorized in Public Law 98-235 and presently awaiting confirmation, and their support staff; (2) $139,000 and five positions (three law clerks and two secretaries) for retired judges who actively serve the Superior Court; (3) $317,000 and eleven positions to handle the increase in the probation supervision caseload of the Social Services Division; and (4) $160,000 and five positions to permit the court to conduct timely probation revocation hearings which now may take up to two weeks for a person on probation who is rearrested on new charges.

In fiscal year 1984 the Congress provided $1,800,000 in capital authority in order to prepare space for the seven new Superior Court Judges who will soon join the court. If this amount proves inadequate the Committees would entertain a reprogramming request or other appropriate action, but in the interim the conferees intend that the work go forward without delay within currently available funds.

Settlements and judgments.—The conference action provides $5,569,000 as requested by the District government instead of $4,369,000 as proposed by the House and Senate. The increase of $1,200,000 above the House and Senate allowance reflects the amount requested in the District's budget amendment which was subsequently revised by District officials. This increase is funded with part of the additional Federal payment of $39 million authorized in Public Law 98-316 included in Amendment No. 1.

Department of Corrections.—The conference action provides a total of $122,364,000 and 2,868 positions instead of $88,944,000 and 2,349 positions as proposed by the House and $118,559,000 and 2,745 positions as proposed by the Senate. The increase of $33,420,000 above the House allowance includes $24 million to reimburse the Federal Bureau of Prisons for District of Columbia code violators held in Federal facilities. This increase reflects an upward revision of $600,000 to the District's amended budget request $23,400,000 considered by the Senate and is necessary according to District officials, because of a projected increase in the inmate population. In addition, the conference action provides $6,215,000 and 396 positions proposed by the Senate as part of the criminal justice initiative (Amendment No. 3) to continue the vocational and basic education programs started in fiscal year 1984. The conference action also provides $3,205,000 and 123 positions requested by the District government to operate Occoquan III as a medium security facility to relieve prison overcrowding. The facility is presently operated as a minimum security facility.

Board of Parole.—The conference action provides $1,228,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $893,000 as proposed by the House. The increase of $335,000 and 10 positions above the House allowance is part of the criminal justice initiative (Amendment No. 3) to be used by the Board in implementing proposed new rules regarding the issuance of warrants and the revocation of parole in those cases where a parolee accused of other crimes has violated the conditions of his/her parole.

Amendment No. 8. Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate adding a new proviso which amends Title 11 of the District of Columbia code extending for one year the authorization for the use of hearing commissioners in the Superior Court of the District of Columbia. This extension will be effective until September 30, 1985.

PUBLIC EDUCATION SYSTEM

Amendment No. 9: The conference action appropriates $495,521,000 instead of $485,331,000 as proposed by the House and $496,333,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Board of Education.—The conference action provides $340,652,000 instead of $338,850,000 as proposed by the House and $340,352,000 as proposed by the Senate. The increase of $1,802,000 above the House allowance is funded with part of the Federal funds included under Amendment No. 3 for the criminal justice initiative, and includes $1,167,000 and 19 guidance counselors and five social workers as proposed by the Senate for a truancy program in the public school system. The conference action also provides $635,000 instead of $335,000 as proposed by the Senate to implement the school improvement and teacher incentive awards recommendations of the Task Force on Merit Pay for Teachers which the Congress funded in last year's bill. The increase of $300,000 above the Senate allowance will allow the Board and Superintendent to begin development of a model recruitment and retention program for teachers, design an internship program for beginning teachers, and develop a mentor teacher program. The conferees strongly support the Board and Superintendent in their efforts to meet and address the challenges they face in providing quality public education for the children of the District of Columbia.

Teachers Retirement and Annuity Fund.—The conference action provides $75,988,000 instead of $67,600,000 as proposed by the House and $77,200,000 as proposed by the Senate. The increase of $8,388,000 above the House allowance reflects a revision to the District's amended budget request initially considered by the Senate and is funded with part of the additional Federal payment of $39 million (Amendment No. 1) authorized by Public Law 98-316. The revision was requested by District officials subsequent to Senate action on the bill and results in a reduction of $1,212,000 below the Senate allowance.

Public Library.—The conference action provides $13,945,000 as proposed by the House instead of $13,845,000 as proposed by the Senate and reflects an increase of $100,000 for the book fund as proposed by the House. With this increase, the book fund will have a total of $1,285,000 available for the purchase of books in fiscal year 1985. The conferees note that in per capita expenditures for books, the District ranked 10th out of 11 urban library systems serving populations ranging between 550,000 and 750,000.

Amendment No. 10: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert the following: $340,652,000.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference action allocates $340,652,000 for the public schools of the District of Columbia instead of $338,850,000 as proposed by the House and $340,352,000 as proposed by the Senate. The increase of $1,802,000 above the House allowance will provide the school system with funds necessary to (1) establish a truancy program and (2) implement the recommendations of the Task Force on Merit Pay for Teachers described earlier under "Board of Education".

Amendment No. 11: Allocates $75,988,000 for the District of Columbia Teachers' Retirement Fund instead of $67,600,000 as proposed by the House and $77,200,000 as proposed by the Senate. The increase of $8,388,000 above the House allowance reflects a revision to the District's amended budget request and is funded with part of the additional Federal payment of $39 million (Amendment No. 1) authorized by Public Law 98-316.

Amendment No. 12: Allocates $13,945,000 for the Public Library as proposed by the House instead of $13,845,000 as proposed by the Senate. The conference allowance provides a total of $1,285,000 for the book fund allotment as proposed by the House.

PUBLIC WORKS

Amendment No. 13: Appropriates $189,377,000 as proposed by the House instead of $192,499,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Department of Public Works.—The conference action provides $84,964,000 as proposed by the House instead of $84,686,000 as proposed by the Senate and includes a total of $621,000 for maintenance of local parks, an increase of $278,000 above the Senate allowance.

The conferees note that funding for this program has been inadequate to meet the mowing and trash collection frequencies necessary to maintain these areas in proper condition and as a result, many of these parks have become eyeshores and nuisances to the surrounding neighborhoods rather the pleasant refreshing areas the planners had in mind. The conferees urge District officials to review their parks and maintenance program and to develop a plan setting forth a minimum level of maintenance services with the objective of maintaining there areas so they will be considered assets by the community and will enhance the surrounding neighborhoods.

Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority.—The conference action provides $100,326,000 as proposed by the House instead of $103,726,000 as proposed by the Senate. The Senate allowance reflected the city's amended budget request which was subsequently revised to the House level by District officials.

WASHINGTON CONVENTION CENTER FUND

Amendment No. 14: Appropriates $6,930,000 as proposed by the House instead of $8,830,100 as proposed by the Senate.

The conferees are agreed that should the District government, in its fiscal year 1986 budget, request funds to purchase the kitchen equipment at the Washington Convention Center, the conferees will honor the city's request.

REPAYMENT OF GENERAL FUND DEFICIT

Amendments Nos. 15 and 16: Apprpriate $20,100,000 as proposed by the House instead of $10,100,000 as proposed by the Senate and restore language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate requiring that $10,000,000 of the $20,100,000 appropriation shall be funded and apportioned by the Mayor from appropriations or revenues otherwise available to the District government.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

Amendment No. 17: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the number proposed by said amendment, insert the following: 31,546

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference action provides a ceiling of 31,546 on the number of full-time permanent employees in the District government instead of 30,972 as proposed by the House and 31,413 as proposed by the Senate. The increase of 564 positions above the House allowance includes 396 positions for the Department of Corrections to continue the vocational and basic education program started in fiscal year 1984; 21 positions for the Superior Court to provide staff for retired judges and probation revoaction hearings; 24 guidance counselors and social workers to work exclusively on truancy cases in the District's public schools; 123 positions for the Department of Corrections to operate the Occoquan III as a medium security correctional facility; and 10 positions to assist the Board of Parole in implementing proposed new rules regarding the issuance of warrants and the revocation of parole.

Amendment No. 18: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which inserts language exempting the District of Columbia from the provisions of section 322 of the Economy Act of 1932 as recommended by the General Accounting Office. The Economy Act presently adhered to by the District limits lease expenditures to 15 percent of the property's fair market value and limits the amount spent on alterations, improvements and repairs to 25 percent of the first year's rent. These provisions prohibit the District from competing with the Federal government and the private sector in obtaining favorable leases in areas of the District of Columbia that are advantageous to the Distirct government in providing services to residents, and with high interest rates and rising real estate taxes, cause the District to settle for less desirable properties. Since the Federal government and private sector are not restricted by the Economy Act, this exemption will enable the District to compete with the Federal government and private sector in obtaining better quality facilities and better use of space in locations where citizens can be better served.

Amendment No. 19: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

SEC. 131. (a) Section 466(b) of the District of Columbia Self-Government and Governmental Reorganization Act (D.C. Code, sec. 47-246) is amended by striking out "sold before October 1, 1984," and inserting in lieu thereof "sold before October 1, 1985,".

(b) Section 303(b) of the District of Columbia Self-Government and Governmental Reorganization Act is amended to read as follows:

"(b) An amendment to the charter ratified by the registered electors shall take effect upon the expiration of the 35-calendar day period (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, holidays, and days on which either House of Congress is not in session) following the date such amendment was submitted to the Congress, or upon the date prescribed by such amendment, whichever is later, unless during such 35-day period, there has been enacted into law a joint resolution, in accordance with the procedures specified in section 604 of this Act, disapproving such amendment. In any case in which any such joint resolution disapproving such an amendment has, within such 35-day period, passed both Houses of Congress and has been transmitted to the President, such resolution, upon becoming law subsequent to the expiration of such 35-day period, shall be deemed to have repealed such amendment, as of the date such resolution becomes law.".

(c)(1) The second sentence of section 412(a) of such Act is amended to read as follows: "Except as provided in the last sentence of this subsection, the Council shall use acts for all legislative purposes.".

(2) The last sentence of section 412(a) of such Act is amended to read as follows: "Resolutions shall be used (1) to express simple determinations, decisions, or directions of the Council of a special or temporary character; and (2) to approve or disapprove proposed actions of a kind historically or traditionally transmitted by the Mayor, the Board of Elections, Public Service Commission, Armory Board, Board of Education, the Board of Trustees of the University of the District of Columbia, or the Convention Center Board of Directors to the Council pursuant to an act. Such resolutions must be specifically authorized by that act and must be designed to implement that act.".

(d) The second sentence of section 602(c)(1) of such Act is amended to read as follows: "Except as provided in paragraph (2), such act shall take effect upon the expiration of the 30-calendar day period (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and holidays, and any day on which neither House is in session because of an adjournment sine die, a recess of more than three days, or an adjournment of more than three days) beginning on the day such act is transmitted by the Chairman to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate, or upon the date prescribed by such act, whichever is later, unless during such 30-day period, there has been enacted into law a joint resolution disapproving such act. In any case in which any such joint resolution disapproving such an act has, within such 30-day period, passed both Houses of Congress and has been transmitted to the President, such resolution, upon becoming law, subsequent to the expiration of such 30-day period, shall be deemed to have repealed such act, as of the date such resolution becomes law.".

(e) The third sentence of section 602(c)(1) of such Act is amended by deleting "concurrent" and inserting in lieu thereof "joint".

(f) The first sentence of section 602(c)(2) of such Act is amended to read as follows: "In the case of any such Act transmitted by the Chairman with respect to any Act codified in title 22, 23, or 24 of the District of Columbia Code, such act shall take effect at the end of the 60-day period beginning on the day such act is transmitted by the Chairman to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate unless, during such 60-day period, there has been enacted into law a joint resolution disapproving such act. In any case in which any such joint resolution disapproving such an act has, within such 60-day period, passed both Houses of Congress and has been transmitted to the President, such resolution, upon becoming law subsequent to the expiration of such 60-day period shall be deemed to have repealed such act, as of the date such resolution becomes law.".

(g) The second sentence of section 602(c)(2) is amended to read as follows: "The provisions of section 604, relating to an expedited procedure for consideration of joint resolutions, shall apply to a joint resolution disapproving such act as specified in this paragraph.".

(h) Section 604(b) of such Act is amended by deleting "concurrent" and inserting in lieu thereof "joint".

(i) Subsections (b) and (c) of section 740 of such Act are amended by deleting in each such subsection the words "adoption of a resolution by either the Senate or the House of Representatives" and inserting in lieu thereof "enactment into law of a joint resolution by the Congress".

(j) Section 740(d) of such Act is amended by deleting "approve a concurrent" and inserting in lieu thereof "enact into law a joint".

(k) The amendments made by the preceding subsections of this section shall not be applicable with respect to any law, which was passed by the Council of the District of Columbia prior to the date of the enactment of this Act, and such laws are hereby deemed valid, in accordance with the provisions thereof, notwithstanding such amendments.

(l) Part F of title VII of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEVERABILITY

"SEC. 762. If any particular provision of this Act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of this Act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.".

(m) Section 164(a)(3) of the District of Columbia Retirement Reform Act is amended to read as follows:

"(3)(A) The Congress may reject any filing under this section within thirty days of such filing by enacting into law a joint resolution stating that the Congress has determined—

"(i) that such filing is incomplete for purposes of this part, or

"(ii) that there is any material qualification by an accountant or actuary contained in an opinion submitted pursuant to section 162(a)(3)(A) or section 162(a)(4)(B).

"(B) If the Congress rejects a filing under subparagraph (A) and if either a revised filing is not submitted within forty-five days after the enactment under subparagraph (A) rejecting the initial filing or such revised filing is rejected by the Congress by enactment into law of a joint resolution within thirty days after submission of the revised filing, then the Congress may, if it deems it is in the best interests of the participants, take any one or more of the following actions:

"(i) Retain an independent qualified public accountant on behalf of the participants to perform an audit.

"(ii) Retain an enrolled acturary on behalf of the participants to prepare an actuarial statement.

The Board and the Mayor shall permit any accountant or actuary so retained to inspect whatever books and records of the Fund and the retirement program are necessary for performing such audit or preparing such statement.

"(C) If a revised filing is rejected under subparagraph (B) or if a filing required under this title is not made by the date specified, no funds appropriated for the Fund with respect to which such filing was required as part of the Federal payment may be paid to the Fund until such time as an acceptable filing was required as part of the Federal payment may be paid to the Fund until such time as an acceptable filing is made. For purposes of this subpargraph, a filing is unacceptable if, within thirty days of its submission, the Congress enacts into law a joint resolution disapproving such filing.".

(n) The provisions of this section shall be effective hereafter without limitation as to fiscal year.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference action includes the provisions of H.R. 3932 (98th Congress) as passed the House of Representatives on October 4, 1983 and amended by the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate and further amended with two changes requested by the District government. H.R. 3932, as amended, simply modifies the District of Columbia Self-Government and Governmental Reorganization Act, commonly referred to as the Home Rule Act (Public Law 93-198 approved December 24, 1974) and brings it into conformity with the June 1983 Supreme Court decision in the case Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) v. Chadha. In that decision, the Court held unconstitutional a provision of the Immigration and Naturalization Act that authorized either House of Congress to override a determination of the Attorney General, pursuant to delegated authority, to suspend the deportation of a resident alien. The Court concluded that Article I, section 7 of the Constitution, which requires that bills be passed by both Houses of Congress and presented to the President for signature, had not been complied with when the veto mechanism was used. A dissenting opinion provided a listing of the Acts or portions of Acts which would be affected by its decision, and included in that listing three sections of the Home Rule Act and one section of the District of Columbia Retirement Reform Act (Public Law 96-122 approved November 17, 1979). Each of these Acts includes a procedure by which Congress, without the President's approval, can reject certain actions of the District of Columbia government by simple or concurrrent resolutions of disapproval or in one instance, approve by resolution the emergency use of local police by the President for a period in excess of 30 days. In using its power, the Congress has exercised its veto over Acts of the District government only twice, even though more than 400 laws have been enacted by the District since Home Rule. However, there is a cloud over all of those laws because of the Chadha decision, and the District is unable to enter the commercial bond market because its bond counsel will not give the District an unqualified opinion as to the legal validity of the District's contractual debt obligation, which would be entered into in a bond or note issuance under statutory authority provided by the Home Rule Charter. Thus, the courts could find the District's contractual debt obligation to be legally invalid and the District would then be legally restricted from paying the obligations that were found to be invalid, despite its desire to make such payments.

The amended version of H.R. 3932 agreed to by the conferees will bring each of the veto provisions of the Home Rule Act into conformity with the Supreme Court's Chadha decision by altering the form of congressional veto action to that of a joint resolution of disapproval which, like laws, must be passed by both Houses of Congress and presented to the President for signature.

The conferees have also agreed to language requested by District officils which extends for one year the authority for the District to borrow through private placements during the transition period to the commercial bond market. This authority was originally provided in Public Law 97-105, approved December 31, 1981 and applies to general obligation bonds sold before October 1, 1984. These bonds are required to be secured by a security interest created in District revenues under section 467(a) of the Home Rule Act. Since the Chadha decision delayed the District's entry into the commercial bond market, it is necessary to extend the date for private placements of bonds to those sold before October 1, 1985 to give the District government a better opportunity to enter the market. The conferees have also added language which makes the provisions of section 131 permanent law and effective without limitation as to fiscal year.

Amendment No. 20: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which inserts language proposed by the Senate requiring the Mayor to reduce authorized appropriations and expenditures for professional and related services by $3,511,000 within the various appropriation titles. The District's budget request for professional fees, consultants and related services reflects an increase of 23 percent above the fiscal year 1984 appropriation. The allowance recommended by the conferees provides for a funding increase of six percent in fiscal year 1985 for professional and related services. The conferees are agreed that this reduction is not to be applied to contractors providing direct services to local residents such as halfway houses and attorneys for indigents. Rather, the reduction is to be applied to those providing the city with advice and so-called consulting services.

Amendment No. 21: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate inserting a new section 133 designating the property located on square numbered 197, lot numbered 841, at 1125 16th Street, Northwest in the District of Columbia as "Andrei Sakharov Plaza".

Amendment No. 22: Deletes language proposed by the Senate stating certain findings by the Congress concerning drug trafficking and enforcement efforts and expressing the sense of the Congress in that regard. The conferees are concerned with drug abuse and drug related crime in the District and the fact that the District has the highest evidence of emergency room mention and deaths resulting from the use of the drug PCP. The conferees direct the government of the District of Columbia to take more aggressive action to halt illegal drug trafficking. The conferees are agreed that the Committees on Appropriations of the House and the Senate in considering further budget requests from the District of Columbia will give the highest priority to those requests for drug enforcement activities.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 2480. EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

CHRISTIAN VIEW OF CENTRAL AMERICA

HON. VIN WEBER OF MINNESOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 26, 1984

● Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of my colleagues to "The Barren Fig Tree," a book which reappraises the Sandinista revolution from a Christian viewpoint. Sister Camilla Mullay, O.P. and Father Robert Barry, O.P., were inspired to write this account because of the extensive media coverage that Christians, actively supporting the Sandinista government, were receiving. They decided to see for themselves whether the Christian values of freedom, justice, and peace, were being realized in this war-torn country. I have submitted several chapters from their book, "The Barren Fig Tree." I believe examining their view of current events is vital for our own search for the truth in this country.

The book follows:

THE BARREN FIG TREE

(By Sister Camilla Mullay, O.P., Father Robert Barry, O.P.)

This pamphlet was inspired by accounts of North American religious, clergy and lay workers about what has happened in Nicaragua since the 1979 revolution that overthrew the oppressive dictatorship of the Somozas. It represents our own effort to study the direction of the present regime of the Sandinista National Liberation Front (FSLN), and to decide what should be our personal stance toward the North American religious movement of "solidarity with the new Nicaragua."

Statements, analyses, articles, interviews, books and lectures have flooded the United States in an effort to draw people, especially church people, into supporting the Sandininsta government. The main argument of this movement is that a Christian must support this revolutionary regime in order to stand with the poor in accord with the Gospel of liberation and justice. Many North American religious and clergy have endorsed the FSLN because they view it as having implemented Christian principles and moral teachings as set forth in Latin American liberation theology. Sojourners, the National Catholic Reporter, the Center of Concern's Focus, and Maryknoll magazines are some of the many periodicals that have published interpretations of developments in Nicaragua in a way favorable to the FSLN. They have concluded that the FSLN has a deep commitment to the "option for the poor," and is effectively attacking the sinful social structures that have caused much misery and suffering.

Nicaragua's tourist industry today consists mainly of highly organized visits by delegations from foreign churches. The typical account of a North American religious worker's pilgrimage to Nicaragua ends in testimony of personal conversion through meeting with poor Nicaraguans dedicated to the revolution; a pledge to join in prayer and to work "in solidarity with" the people of Nicaragua; and a commitment to oppose any U.S. intervention in Central America.

The explanation for the sympathy these religious visitors have for revolutionary Nicaragua often follows a pattern, which can be summarized as follows:

1. There is no contradiction between Christianity and the revolution. In fact, not only does religious freedom exist in Nicaragua—a renewed and authentic Christianity flourishes there.

2. The FSLN is, by both word and deed, a genuine advocate of the poor.

3. Opposition to the regime comes essentially from those who were deprived of their power as a result of the revolution, e.g. somocistas and some church leaders who identify with "bourgeois" interests.

4. The new regime is self-critical and humble in admitting its mistakes.

5. The main source of whatever problems now exist for Nicaragua is the Reagan Administration, which works through the reactionary contras and other counterrevolutionary elements in order to topple the Sandinista government.

Some supporters of the revolution go further. The theme that Christianity flourishes under the Sandinistas often becomes a claim that the revolutionary Marxism of the Sandinistas is the true Christianity. Father Ernesto Cardenal, Minister of Culture, explained his own spiritual evolution as the result of a visit to Cuba in 1970:

It was like a second conversion. Before then, I saw myself as a revolutionary, but I had confused ideas. I was trying to find a third way, which was the revolution of the gospel, but then I saw that Cuba was the Gospel put into practice.

For those who share this view, the only problem is how to integrate the Latin American Church more fully into the revolutionary process. Some of our Dominican brothers and sisters from various countries who visited Nicaragua in July of 1983 wrote that "many of the people profoundly lament that the majority of their official pastoral agents are not united with them nor share their interests." They strongly defended "the Christian values, attitudes and commitment to faith, hope and pardon present in the revolutionary process of the Sandinistas."

But there is another side to the story of Nicaragua. When we read the reports and statements by the Nicaraguan Catholic bishops, we hear grave criticisms about what is happening to their country. A visitor to Nicaragua today finds that many clergy share the view of the bishops. A number of credible figures—former supporters of the Sandinistas—who left Nicaragua in fear have begun to speak out: Humberto Belli, Wycliffe Diego, Jose Esteban Gonzalez, Geraldine O'Leary de Macias, Adriana Guillen. They tell about such things as the forced relocation of the Miskito Indians, about deprivation of human rights, about continued press censorship, and about a steadily-advancing government intrusion into almost every aspect of daily life. There is increasing testimony of a government-sponsored campaign against the churches, characterized by efforts to foster division and to defame official church leaders, both Catholic and Protestant, who voice any criticism of a government policy. According to The Washington Post, on June 22, 1984, Archbishop Obando y Bravo of Managua even went so far as to announce that he believes that the Sandinista government "intends to eliminate the Catholic Church in order to implant the so-called Popular Church."

The Catholic Church outside Nicaragua, especially that of North America and Western Europe, appears to be confused and divided about the meaning and direction of the Nicaraguan revolution. On the occasion of his last visit to Nicaragua theologian Henri Nouwen wrote that he was beset by unanswered questions: "Whom to believe, whom to trust, whom to learn from?" He summarized the different opinions that he heard:

Some say, "What is happening in Nicaragua is nationalism: a country trying to determine its own future." Others say, "No, it's internationalism: a country becoming the victim of Cuban-Soviet domination." Some say, "What you see in Nicaragua is the best example of a revolution in which Christian values are truly integrated." Others say, "No, it is a revolution based on atheistic principles and bent on the eradication of all religious beliefs." Some say, "What Nicaragua is trying to accomplish is a socialistic society in which all the people can equally enjoy the fruits of the land and the products of human labor." Others say, "No, Nicaragua is gradually becoming the subject of a totalitarian regime in which the state will control every part of life and in which even the little bit of freedom that existed under Somoza will be taken away."

We decided to pursue these questions. Our focus is the freedom of conscience and religious expression in its fullest meaning. We believe that religious freedom is a primary and inalienable human right—the raison d'etre of other freedoms. We also believe that, properly understood, the Church does have a special mission to the poor.

Are people really free in Nicaragua? Is the Church truly free in Nicaragua to pursue its full mission including its mission to the poor? We do not have the final answers to these questions—but we do have more clarity than we did before we undertook our study.

1. THE REVOLUTION: EARLY HOPES

When a broad coalition of the Nicaraguan people succeeded in overthrowing the oppressive dictatorship of Anastasio Somoza in July 1979, a great hope was born. Both in Nicaragua and in the United States, particularly among religious people, expectations arose that a new society could be built on principles of justice in a country that had suffered for too long. For many, including the Catholic bishops of Nicaragua, it seemed possible that the time had come for a new national community whose structure would embody the Christian option for the poor.

The Catholic Church in Nicaragua had disassociated itself from the Somoza dynasty well before the revolution. Archbishop Obando y Bravo had refused to attend the inauguration of Anastasio Somoza, had declined to serve on his earthquake relief committee, and had been a pivotal figure in consolidating the opposition movement. The Nicaraguan bishops condemned abuses under Somoza in a series of pastoral letters and on June 2, 1979 they proclaimed the right of the Nicaraguan people to engage in revolutionary insurrection. Somoza's memoirs have nothing but bitter criticism for the Nicaraguan bishops, particularly Archbishop Obando. After the victorious entry of the FSLN troops into Managua, Obando took the remarkable step of celebrating a Mass of Thanksgiving in the central square.

The new government moved initially in ways that reinforced the hopes of the bishops and the Nicaraguan people. A health program was begun with a massive immunization project against polio and measles. A campaign of health education was launched, and clinics were established around the country. Soon a massive literacy campaign was also underway. Housing projects were begun to provide for the thousands of persons left homeless by the destructive civil war. The extensive property—including many factories—once owned by Somoza and his followers was nationalized. Many volunteers were needed for these immense tasks and hundreds of priests and sisters worked wholeheartedly in many different ways to carry on what was called the revolutionary process. Several Catholic priests even received ministerial posts in the government. Financial assistance both from government and private sources poured in from abroad to assist in these new programs.

In November of 1979, a few months after the overthrow of Somoza, the Nicaraguan Catholic bishops issued a pastoral letter fully endorsing the revolutionary process and exhorting all to cooperate in it:

The situation in our country today offers an exceptional opportunity for announcing and bearing witness to God's kingdom. If through fear and mistrust, through the insecurity of some in the face of any radical social change, or through the desire to defend personal interests, we neglect this crucial opportunity to commit ourselves to the poor . . . we would be in serious violation of the Gospel's teachings.[6]

At the same time, the Nicaraguan bishops' letter set forward some careful guidelines which they believed the revolution had to follow. These included:

Freedom of expression and criticism,

No "creation of a new idol before which everyone must bow down unquestioningly",

Freedom of political parties,

Continuity of existing popular democratic organizations and the possibility for new organizations to arise out of national dialogue,

The individual's right to a religious motivation, and to express this motivation and religious belief publicly, regardless of one's faith,

The right of parents to educate their children according to their convictions,

The right of people and communities to decide their own destinies,

A preference for the poor.

These criteria are not exclusively Roman Catholic, but they are central to modern Church teaching. They insist on the dignity and rights of human persons, and the need for responsible democratic participation. The Nicaraguan bishops' view of the role of the Church follows Pope John Paul II's message to the Puebla Conference of Latin American Bishops, where he stressed that "complete truth about human beings is the basis of the Church's social teaching, even as it is the basis of authentic liberation. In the light of this truth we see that human beings are not the pawns of economic or political processes, that instead these processes are geared toward human beings and subject to them."

It should therefore be clear that there was nothing reactionary or "Old Church" in the outlook of these bishops. They explicitly stated that they had no objections to socialism if it meant, "as it should, that the interests of the majority of Nicaraguans are paramount and if it includes a model of an economic system planned with national interests in mind that is in solidarity with and provides for increased participation by the people." They further affirmed: "For what we, together with most Nicaraguans, seek is a process that will result in a society completely and truly Nicaraguan, one that is neither capitalistic, nor dependent, nor totalitarian." That is to say, whatever specific form the revolutionary society might take, the bishops insisted that it be based upon democratic choice.

2. SANDINISTA EDUCATION

The first test of the Nicaraguan revolutionary government came in the field of education—an area that had been cruelly neglected under the Somoza regime. About fifty-two percent of Nicaraguans were illiterate, and the new government won worldwide applause for undertaking a massive effort to teach them basic reading and writing. The economically battered country received large donations for the literacy program from many individual countries—including the U.S.—and from the United Nations and many church bodies as well. A million basic literacy textbooks were printed, and a week-long training course was given to the young people going out to teach—among them some 60,000 high schoolers. The five-month campaign began on March 25, 1980, and news accounts reported that 110,000 youths were soon teaching 700,000 people to read and write.

Some groups within Nicaragua, however, soon began to complain that the literacy campaign was being used to indoctrinate the people in a particular political ideology. Although many groups with a variety of philosophies had participated in the revolution, only one political group was being promoted by the literacy drive. Sentences in the official primer declared that "The FSLN led the people to its liberation." And again, "The Sandinista Defense Committees defend the revolution." Father Fernando Cardenal, S.J., director of the literacy program and a leading Sandinista figure, aroused further anxieties when he responded to critics by explaining that "There is no education that is not political. An apolitical education is also political because it is purposefully isolating."

A teacher's handbook for use in the literacy campaign underscored Cardenal's point:

The National Literacy Crusade does not only attempt to teach reading and writing. It attempts at the same time to make our popular masses aware of the reality in which they have lived, and helps them discover who is their friend and who are their enemies, who are their allies and who is their vanguard.

The handbook also stressed the international character of the Sandinista revolution, and explained that Nicaragua was following in the footsteps of other countries which have "liberated" themselves: "There are many peoples—such as Cuba, Angola, Viet Nam and Nicaragua—that have triumphed in the anti-imperialist struggle."

The literacy handbook also included the Sandinista hymn, which school children are made to sing every day and which is printed on their report cards. One of its verses reads: "We fight against the Yankee, enemy of humanity." Lawrence E. Harrison, director of the USAID mission in Nicaragua from 1979 to 1981, frequently expressed concern to Sandinista officials about that line in the hymn. (At the time, the Carter Administration was providing $120 million in aid to the country, including 100,000 tons of food.) Jaime Wheelock, an influential comandante, assured him the word "poverty" would be substituted for "the Yankee," but the change was never made. From the beginning, Harrison also worked to have American Peace Corps teachers accepted by the new government to help with the literacy educational campaign, hoping to offset what appeared to be a massive influx of Cuban teachers. But not a single Peace Corps volunteer was accepted.

Not only was the content of the literacy program political; so was the manner in which it was organized. It soon became a mass mobilization in support of the FSLN. "It was a political promotional campaign to organize the grass-roots structure of the Sandinista Party," says one of the teachers, who once also served as coordinator of the Popular Centers of Culture. All the literacy instructors were organized into groups according to age and education level. The university students had a special responsibility to promote the FSLN organizations. The comandantes' speeches to them were very clear about the political purpose of the crusade; it would, they explained, be the vein of gold from which young leaders would be procured to govern the new society. The literacy crusade ended in a huge rally for its young workers. Their reward was automatic induction into the FSLN Party, and the campaign's coordinator, Father Fernando Cardenal, was later named Youth Director for both the party and the government.

There were also some reports—an omen of the future—that the purposes of the literacy program went even beyond partisan politics. When the campaign was over, the independent Managua daily La Prensa interviewed some of the young teachers about their experiences. Asked what they had learned during their time in the mountains, some replied that they had learned to use rifles—rifles of a Soviet make.●

THE TREATMENT OF LABORATORY ANIMALS: "SAVAGERY AND SCIENCE AND CIVILIZATION'S STAKE"

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 26, 1984

● Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, Henry Mitchell in a recent article in the Washington Post raised a number of significant issues with regard to the treatment of laboratory animals. The questions he poses are major ones that go to the basis of our civilization.

His thoughtful comments are not sentimental anger against science and research altogether, but rather serious, well-considered criticism of the way in which some research with living animals is carried out by some unthinking and uncaring researchers.

There is no question that legislation to regulate humane methods of research is needed. It is unfortunate that there are many vocal opponents, who stand in the way of such necessary and important legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues in the House to give careful consideration to Mr. Mitchell's article. It raises questions all of us should think about.

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 21, 1984]

SAVAGERY AND SCIENCE AND CIVILIZATION'S STAKE

(By Henry Mitchell)

Death and unalleviated suffering are perfectly acceptable in both humans and animals—even in your favorite hound—on occasion.

Not that those are desirable things, but when they are unavoidable they do not raise feelings of disgust. Thus an old bleeding heart like me has had no trouble at all being first on the scene when young men died in car accidents. It was not pleasant, but it was neither disgusting nor traumatic to pull one of them away from his truck where the gasoline was pouring down on him. He died a few minutes later, and anyone would feel a surge of grief at a life cut short, senselessly as we would say.

But disgust and rage are absent.

Neither is there cause for rage when kids accidentally let your favorite hound out of his yard and he is hit by a car as you watch, and you pick him up and on the way to the vet's he struggles over on the seat to rest his head on your lap. No evil attaches to the kids or to the driver that hit him or the vet that tried to save him. The emptiness remains, but it is a condition of having been born in the first place that such events will happen not once or twice but many times and it is simple wisdom to accept them.

It is entirely different, though, if the same death or the same suffering is caused deliberately, for no sane purpose. Savagery is very much part of the nature of all humans I have ever known, and that is one reason civilized nations have gone to such efforts to restrain it or redirect it.

Most of us get through the world without murdering people or pulling wings off birds because we mutually support each other in civilized ways, but it must be a naive human indeed who has not noticed unattractive things in himself.

If we somehow miss that back-and-forth exchange with the civilized world, however, or if our laws, courts, government officials and so on slide back from civilized standards, then we or any other people allow our natural savagery to come forth, and this tension between what we think we believe and what we really are has always been the main crisis of civilization.

Almost every American, I think, would object strongly to a guy who for the sake of entertainment soaked small cats, or even large ones, in turpentine and set them afire. Civilization has insinuated itself so deeply into the national life that we may be startled to notice how civilized we really are catturpentinewise.

If, however, somebody tells us that animals are routinely tortured in laboratories, we do not for a second believe it, and we suppose the messenger is some sort of nut who perhaps is anti-science, or who is so hopelessly sentimental in the worst meaning of the word that we should avoid him in the future.

Most of us believe—though we concede there are various arguments to the contrary—that it is acceptable to conduct experiments on animals when the purpose is to advance medical knowledge, to develop new techniques (burn therapy comes to mind, for surely humans are now alive who even a few years ago would have died from burns before these sophisticated therapies were developed) and to add to serious knowledge generally.

We are convinced the government has set standards for humane treatment of laboratory animals. We believe it is the law that animals may not be tortured for frivolous reasons. We believe scientists are as humane as any other group of ordinary Americans and like the rest of us have known what it is to love a dog.

So we hear with considerable annoyance the repeated and now increasing volume of protest against practices in scientific laboratories with research animals.

At hearings this week by a congressional subcommittee chaired by Rep. George Edward Brown Jr. (D-Calif.) on the subject of legislation to regulate humane methods of research, one view was frequently expressed.

While there may have been one or two widely publicized incidents of heartless treatment in laboratories, by and large the animals are treated with tremendous concern for their sufferings. Especially in laboratories accredited by groups concerned with laboratory animals, it is virtually unheard of for animals to be mistreated, or housed badly, or otherwise made to suffer. And in those researches on animals that necessarily result in pain and death, every effort is made to insure that no animal suffers needlessly, but is given anesthetics or a humane death when recovery is not possible.

This is a highly civilized view. The only trouble with it is that it may be factually wrong.

"What evidence is there, after all, that mistreatment of laboratory animals is a problem in the first place?" This question was repeatedly asked in one form or other during the daylong session in the Longworth House Office Building.

It is a reasonable question. What evidence in fact exists?

There are reports of inspectors sent by the federal government to check routinely in laboratories. What do their reports say?

Well, I have read excerpts from many of them, and I think they say there is vast room for improvement in laboratory practices.

Unfortunately, it takes time and effort to read the reports. It takes some hours even to read the arguments submitted to the Brown hearings.

It takes time to read a report submitted to the regents of the University of California at Berkeley, a damning study of laboratory animals there, a report including interoffice confidential memoranda. It even takes time, and a stronger stomach than I possess, to view the tapes stolen from a laboratory at the University of Pennsylvania, showing primates in research on head injuries.

We by and large do not have the time to explore such questions, which do not concern us in our daily rounds. Since we do not want to hear details, we do not know details, and wind up saying there is no evidence beyond the shrill and perhaps paranoid cries of the few who protest so loudly. We turn our annoyance against the messengers, an easier thing than trying to weigh the facts, which can hardly be weighed without first hearing them.

We neither know nor wish to know the amount of money involved (detailed figures are available and suffice it to say many millions of tax dollars a year go into it) in scientific research involving animals. We do not wish to think of the extent to which researchers and universities rely on such money, and wish it to continue.

We have neither the time nor the expertise to evaluate the usefulness to science of prying a helmet off a baboon with a hammer and screwdriver after the animal, still alive, has been slammed (to use a laboratory word) to simulate the blows received by boxers or car accident victims.

I find myself unwilling to write about unsavory things, when what I really want to do is relay some enchanting anecdote about the horse in London that was in a bomb explosion but recovered, etc.

If criticism is voiced about lack of anesthetics, or failures even worse, will this not be interpreted as sentimental anger against science and research altogether? And God knows nobody wants to read it anymore than a writer wants to write it, so usually the thing is unsaid and unheard and we wind up saying there is no evidence.

There is evidence and it is sickening. Legislation is needed, and those who do not wish to concern themselves with what amounts to flamboyant sadism should at least have the grace not to obstruct the long hard thankless labors of those who have not shied from the evidence and who have at last come up with reasonable and moderate legislation. Which does not restrict any laboratory experiment, however painful or fatal, beyond requiring minimally humane methodology. It is inconceivable there can be objections.

It is also worth pointing out that the University of California and the University of Pennsylvania are not two-bit institutions. If laboratory abuses can occur there, they can occur anywhere, simply because humane care of animals takes time and money and careful administration—things always in short supply.

The tapes stolen (stealing is an important crime, needless to say) from the University of Pennsylvania lab were originally to have been shown in the Longworth Building, but governmental objections prevailed and they were shown at St. Mark's Church. I sat still for about five minutes of them, noticing the rather pretty windows over the altar full of angels making music. The tapes were shown a few feet in front of the altar, though the site is irrelevant. The language of the laboratory experimenters, ("he's going to bite your . . .," etc.) is excusable on the grounds that what was being done would naturally arouse anxiety and be reflected in words appropriate for uneasy men.

All the same, I left, thinking it probably an esthetic error to vomit in a sanctuary.●

TRIBUTE TO A NATIONAL PARK PLANNER

HON. JOHN F. SEIBERLING
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 26, 1984

● Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, there are few places in the United States that give people more pleasure than our national parks, including the urban national recreation areas that grace a number of our larger cities.

One person whose creativity and vision has helped make these parks so special is Theodore R. (Tedd) McCann, a park planner who is retiring this week from the National Park Service, after 30 years of Government service.

Tedd has actually had several careers, beginning as an artist who trained in fine arts at the Chicago and Corcoran art schools and graduated with a degree in art history and painting from the George Washington University, Washington, DC. He was a graphics designer for the U.S. Air Force during the Korean war and for the Bureau of Reclamation from 1957 to 1960.

After heading his own house restoration business in Washington, DC, and Alexandria, VA, Tedd joined the National Park Service in 1963 as a professional art director. He helped Mr. Vince Gleason put together a graphics and cartography unit in the publications office; it later received a gold medal from the First Federal Design Assembly, which hailed it as the best in Government.

URBAN PARKS

In the fall of 1967, NPS Director George Hartzog set up an Office of Urban Affairs, and Tedd worked on a number of projects, including the then-proposed Wolftrap Farm Park, the Georgetown Waterfront, Fort Lincoln, Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore, Delaware Water Gap National Recreation Area, and the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial.

In 1968, Tedd and designer Russell Wright created and developed the "Summer in the Parks" program here in Washington, DC, which became one of the most successful urban park programs in the United States and one that was used as a model for similar programs in Federal, State, and local parks throughout the country.

At the close of the first season of "Summer in the Parks," Tedd was sent on a factfinding trip to over 30 American cities to report on urban problems and urban park programs. Many of his recommendations for new programs were adopted.

In 1969, Tedd was chosen to be a member of the planning team which, in just 11 weeks time, came up with a plan and proposed legislation to establish the Gateway National Recreation Area in New York/New Jersey. The next year he was sent to San Francisco to help produce a similar study for the Golden Gate National Recreation Area. The two urban national recreation areas were subsequently established by the Congress in 1972.

CUYAHOGA VALLEY

My first encounter with Tedd was in 1971, when Tedd was chosen by Secretary of the Interior Rogers Morton to head up a team to study the feasibility and desirability of establishing a new urban national recreation area in the Cuyahoga Valley between Akron and Cleveland, OH. The preservation of the valley as a park had been recommended by planners as far back as 1926, when a study was carried out by the firm founded by Frederick Law Olmsted. In the late 1960's the State of Ohio had begun working to help create such a park but it lacked the ability to do it on the scale that was needed. In 1971 I introduced a bill to create a national park unit in the area, but the legislation was stymied without a detailed plan, and with no precise boundaries and guidelines for its future development.

Tedd and two other planners first visited the valley in July 1971. He later told me that they were not enthusiastic about the assignment, and just figured they had to go because "some politician from Ohio" wanted them to look at "what was obviously a dog." They were prepared to come out and take a quick look at it and say that it wasn't worth making it into a park. However, they came out and drove up and down the valley and were absolutely amazed. They stayed not just one day but three, and went everywhere they could and took dozens of pictures. Indeed, Tedd became so enthusiastic, at a time when his Park Service superiors at the time were not, that it probably hurt his career.

Nevertheless, Tedd and his planning team made many visits to the area, and prepared a study, printed in April 1973, that was sensitive to both the natural and cultural resources of the area. It was also beautifully written, with a clarity and lyrical quality seldom found in Government reports. The Cuyahoga Valley, located in this highly industrialized area of northeast Ohio, was described as a "green-shrouded miracle." The report further noted that growth patterns and trends revealed that the "urban noose is tightening around this already captive segment of the river," and that the area between Akron and Cleveland would soon "become as urbanized as the older central cities." The report further noted that coordinated regional planning in the area was "embryonic," that interest in collective action among Federal, State and local agencies was "high" and that a committed Federal presence was "desparately needed."

On December 27, 1974, the legislation establishing the Cuyahoga Valley National Recreation Area was enacted into law. The boundaries had been expanded to include a number of additional areas, including several State and local park units that were not slated for acquisition by the National Park Service. However, the basic concept of the recreation area has remained the same as it was over a dozen years ago. It is, indeed, a "green-shrouded miracle."

OTHER PARK PLANS AND PROJECTS

Since then, Tedd has worked on a variety of other park plans and projects, including early studies of the Lowell National Historical Park, MA; Chattahoochee River National Recreation Area GA; Santa Monica Mountains National Recreation Area, CA; and Ellis Island and Statue of Liberty National Monument, NY. His plans led to the inclusion of Glen Echo Park, MD, into the National Capital Parks. His study of President Roosevelt's summer home in Warm Springs, GA, has been used to help assist protection of that unique area by the State. He also did a feasibility study of Rockefeller estate in Pocantico Hills, NY, participated in a study of potential black historic sites throughout the country and worked on several general studies of urban parks and recreation programs. Most recently, he has been working on the management plan for the Women's Rights National Historical Park, NY.

Other accomplishments include his work in the early 1970's in helping to negotiate the first agreements with the National Park Service and the National Folk Festival Association and American Crafts Council. His concept for a Parks, Arts and Leisure Conference in 1972 was later instituted by the National Endowment for the Arts and the National Parks & Recreation Association. The same year, several of his ideas for bicentennial programs were developed and subsequently adopted by the American Revolution Bicentennial Commission.

One of his earliest achievements was in developing the first sign standards program of the National Park Service in 1966. He also conceived the idea and developed the "mini-folder" which resulted in actual savings of hundreds of thousands of dollars to the Park Service. Many of the park folders he designed are still in use.

An excellent photographer, Tedd has produced a number of outstanding audio-visual presentations over the years. He has also written several articles on park issues, particularly urban parks, and has given talks to university classes and meetings of park and planning organizations. In 1972, he represented the National Park Service in New York City at the sesquicentennial year celebration of the birth of Frederick Law Olmsted, the father of landscape architecture in the United States. Tedd has also provided technical assistance to other Federal, State and local park agencies and organizations.

COMMUNITY LEADER

In addition to his National Park Service career, Tedd has been a community leader and activist here in Washington. A resident of Takoma, DC, he is an active member of Neighbors, Inc., an organization dedicated to fostering and maintaining integrated neighborhoods. During the mid-1970's, he volunteered his talents to help the Takoma neighborhood work with city planners to develop a comprehensive plan for the area around the Takoma Metrorail station. The plan was subsequently adopted by city agencies and many of its recommendations, such as for rezoning and historic district designation of the area, were later implemented. More recently, Tedd served on a transportation task force which prepared a comprehensive transportation plan for the area.

Tedd has also served as a member of the board of Historic Takoma, and organization encompassing both Takoma, DC, and Takoma Park, MD. For several years he was a member of the coordinating committee for the annual Takoma Park Folk Festival, and he designed and constructed the booths and displays which the festival still uses. An avid gardener, Tedd is currently treasurer of the Takoma Park Horticultural Society. He is also a member of several city-wide organizations, including the prestigeous Committee of 100 on the Federal City, the oldest citizens planning organization in Washington, DC.

For all these reasons Tedd deserves recognition. He represents the best of what a Federal employee can be—innovative, hardworking and dedicated to pursuing excellence in his career while also sharing his talents and experience with his community. I'm sure he will continue his outstanding work in his private life, and I certainly wish the best of luck to him in the future.●

SUCCESS STORY: WESTINGHOUSE AT WEST VALLEY

HON. STAN LUNDINE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 26, 1984

● Mr. LUNDINE. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Science and Technology Committee, I just made a visit to the West Valley demonstration project. From what I saw, a recent article in The Buffalo News accurately reflects the kind of successful recovery which can happen when concerned Americans make up their minds to correct a neglected problem.

I refer to the complex task of handling nuclear waste accumulated since 1966 from abandoned nuclear fuel reprocessing at West Valley, NY.

The article entitled "West Valley To Test Conversion Process for Nuke Waste" is well worth our attention, and I compliment the News for its story. Among other things, the article reports that the West Valley project in the past 2½ years has: Attracted the attention of nuclear experts worldwide: "The West Valley demonstration project is visited frequently by Belgian, French, German, and Japanese persons involved in nuclear waste management." Made progress in decontaminating "highly radioactive key work areas," received an award from the Department of Energy for surpassing Federal safety standards, and brought to West Valley a new kind of "melter" by which "nearly 600,000 gallons of highly radioactive waste stored here will be blended, melted and poured into borosilicate, glasslike logs, for long-term storage."

The work is being done by the West Valley Nuclear Services Co., a subsidiary of Westinghouse, under contract with the Department of Energy.

The project is an example of problem solving with U.S. know-how at its best, and the eyes of the world are on us.

The news article coincidentally is evidence of the project's open information policy which helps dispel anxieties nurtured by the kind of secrecy imposed upon West Valley operations in earlier years.

I ask unanimous consent that the Buffalo News article of August 2 be placed at this point in the RECORD.

[From the Buffalo News, Aug. 2, 1984]

WEST VALLEY TO TEST CONVERSION PROCESS FOR NUKE WASTE

(By Bob Buyer)

WEST VALLEY.—Before the end of the year, technicians at the West Valley Nuclear Services Co. expect to begin testing the process by which nearly 600,000 gallons of highly radioactive nuclear waste stored here will be blended, melted and poured into borosilicate, glasslike logs, for long-term storage.

The testing will be with nonradioactive materials and the newly designed melter that has just arrived here at the federally funded West Valley Demonstration Project.

The conversion of the radioactive waste is not scheduled to start until 1988, said James E. Krauss, the service's technical director.

When it does start, the new melter is designed to fill one stainless steel storage canister every 36 hours until an estimated 300 are filled, Mr. Krauss said. Each canister will contain a glass log 10 feet long and 2 feet in diameter.

The canisters, in turn, temporarily will be stored in a still undesignated location, pending the scheduled development of a permanent storage area. Congress has set 1998 as the date for the readiness of a permanent storage area, said Troy E. Wade II, manager of the Department of Energy's Idaho Operations Office.

Specialists now are evaluating seven areas in Louisiana, Mississippi, Nevada and Washington so that the secretary of energy can designate three areas for preparation as permanent storages for the highlevel radioactive waste, Mr. Wade added.

Recommending a New York area for storing the continuing flow of New York-generated low-level wastes (gloves, clothing, hospital and laboratory materials) will be a task assigned to the state Department of Environmental Conservation if a pending state bill is approved this fall.

Commissioner William Cotter of the state Energy Office said a time problem is involved, because states will be responsible for handling their radioactive wastes after January 1986.

Conceivably, West Valley could be designated either as a temporary area for aboveground storage of these materials or as a permanent site, he said.

In fact, no one has been looking at sites because the Legislature has yet to pass the bill setting up the procedure, the commissioner said.

Mr. Wade, Mr. Cotter, Leo P. Duffy, manager of Westinghouse's Waste Technology Services, and others involved in the project were in West Valley for a project were in West Valley for a project review and a showing of the new melter.

Dr. William H. Hannum, the Energy Department resident director at West Valley, told the assemblage "that the basic technology for handling highly radioactive materials already exists. We must not be afraid to use it."

Mr. Krauss said the melter and canister-containing turntable below it will be placed in a 35-foot-deep area in a new building. The just-erected test building may or may not be the final melter building.

The radioactive liquid waste, product of a nuclear fuel cell reprocessing or cleansing process halted a decade ago, will be piped from its current underground storage about 100 yards away to the electrically heated melter.

Mr. Krauss said the West Valley method of converting liquid waste directly into the glasslike logs is new and differs from the French method that goes from liquid to powder before the glass stage.

M. Bruce Boswell, president of West Valley, said his team of scientists and engineers in 2½ years has developed "unmatched expertise" in nuclear-waste management. The West Valley Demonstration Project is visited frequently by Belgian, French, German and Japanese persons involved in nuclear-waste management.

Mr. Boswell accepted an award from the Energy Department recognizing West Valley's safety record, which surpassed federal standards.

Currently, the West Valley project employs about 400 persons. Ultimately 450 may work there.

Since October, technicians have been decontaminating working areas of the former Nuclear Fuel Services plant. Of three highly radioactive key work areas, one has been partially cleansed and work on a second is about to start.

Unprocessed and radioactive nuclear fuel cells stored in the project's "swimming pool" are being removed regularly and returned to utility owners in Illinois and Wisconsin.

When all are gone, the pool will be used in the conversion process.●

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Thursday, September 27, 1984, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.
